spleen of his black heart on his patient, un-murmuring wife and mother. From words he soon came to blows, and blow succeeded blow, from the incestuous son and parricide, till the mother, fainting from loss of blood, sank on the floor. He dragged her, then, into the chamber, that she might not be seen, and left her there all but dead, unmurdered and uncared for. Slowly recovering from her swoon, the broken-hearted woman cast herself on her knees in gratitude to God for having spared her husband a second murder. Not long after this brutal occurrence, the recollection of the awful dream she had during her pregnancy, a long time ago, was brought vividly to her mind, by observing a blackish spot on the neck of Judas; as the infant she had exposed, bore a similar mark on the same part of the body. Remembering, then, that the right foot of the infant was web-footed, she anxiously sought an opportunity to verify this unmistakable point of identity. An occasion soon presented itself; and, struck with horror at the fulfillment of the prophecy, she screamed out, in the presence of Judas,—"O my God! I now see that the terrific dream that appalled me so often, is but too awfully verified. He is my son. He is a parricide—the cold-blooded murderer of his own harmless and honest father—the sacrilegious thief of the holy vessels, which I have so often without knowing them, seen him converting into his idolized money—the brutal and incestuous husband of the mother that bore him. O my God!—the misery and anguish of my life is nothing to this last blow—my reason wanders, my heart is bursting, I feel the blood is boiling in my veins, my sight is failing, my brain reels, my tongue cleaves to the roof of my mouth. O God! I am dying—my son—murder—sacrilege—incest—mercy—God!" she muttered, and in the very chamber where the wretch, Judas, was born, and where he now stood, as it were, petrified at the discovery of his crimes, his mother fell heavily on the floor, a lifeless corpse.

This mixture of Jewish and Pagan recollections this amalgamation of horrors borrowed from the history of Edipus, Moses and Pilate, gives us the characteristic trait of the middle Ages, when all the floating traditions were confused, and the writers imagination laid all under contribution to adorn and illustrate the truths of Christianity.

Let us return to Ahasuerus, whom we have forgotten in the biography of Judas. We have already said, that he was a man, of the common class of society, of middling education, limited intellect, and a fanatical partisan of the Scribes and Pharisees. Curious and anxious for news, he rushed from his house at the noise of the populace about Jesus, to be present at the scene of Crucifixion. We will now give his narration in his own words in order to preserve the form, and style and colors of the popular legend.

"I was at my door," said he, "when I saw a great crowd running by, and shouting that they were going to crucify Jesus. I took my young child in my arms to show him the prisoner. Just at this moment, I perceived Jesus, laden with a heavy cross, under which he staggered along. He stopped to rest before my door, exhausted from the loss of blood, he suffered at the Pillar. But thinking this a great insult to myself, I said in angry tones to Jesus: 'Go away, be off from my door; no wretched impostor like you, shall dare to rest near it.' Jesus looked up with a sorrowful countenance, and answered: 'I will go, but I will soon be at rest. You too shall leave that door, but you shall never find repose; you shall wander, as long as the world shall be a world, even to the day of judgment. Go away, you shall see me seated at the right hand of my Father, judging the twelve tribes, who shall crucify me.' I then set the child on the ground and followed Jesus. The first person I saw, was Veronica, who fearlessly rushed through the mob with a towel to wipe the clotted blood from the face of Jesus; the likeness of which remained imprinted upon the towel. A little farther on, I saw a soldier passing by, with a basket, in which he had large nails and a hammer. He took one of the nails, and almost touching the face of Mary with it, he said: 'Look, woman, look at the nails with which your son will be nailed to the cross.' I then went on with the rest to the hill of Calvary. When arrived there, they then took the cross and laid it on the ground. Some of the executioners began to dig great holes while others were stripping the clothes that clung to the lacerated back of Jesus. Being thus stripped naked in the presence of everybody, not one turned away his eyes from so sad a spectacle. Some laughed, others jested and mocked at him, while the more cruel struck and abused him. They then stretched him at full length on the cross, and I soon heard, for I could not bear to see it, the heavy strokes of the hammer tearing the nails through the nerves and sinews of his hands and feet. The cross was next lifted up and planted on the same spot where Adam had been buried, and where the trees which I mentioned above, had grown. After some time, Jesus spoke a few words and died. There immediately was darkness, and a terrible tempest burst forth with unparalleled violence, the dead arose from their tombs, the rocks were cleft, and the earth opened in fountains of fire of the cross. Longinus, one of Herod's soldiers, came up, and pierced with a lance the side of Jesus, who was already dead. There gushed forth out of the wound blood and water, and the blood streaming down the wood flowed into the opening at the foot of the cross, and bedewed with its precious tide the bodies of Adam and Eve, whose bodies were there interred. Longinus had lost one of his eyes, and when he pierced the side of Jesus, the blood flowed down on his hand; and feeling a pain in his eye, he rubbed it with his bloody hand, and he immediately recovered his sight. A short time afterwards he was baptized, became a bishop, and received the palm of martyrdom. As soon as Christ was dead, I cast a long lingering look on the city of Jerusalem, before leaving, for I felt an irresistible impulse to depart, and wander, I knew not where. Thus I commenced that never ending journey, where I can find no resting place. After my travels through the whole world, I returned to Judea. But my parents, my wife, children and friends were no more. A hundred years had passed since I began my wandering, and I felt the deepest despair at being obliged to live so long. I again left Jerusalem, where no one knew or cared for me, resolved to throw myself into every possible danger to end my hated existence. But all my attempts at self-destruction were in vain, for the word of God must be fulfilled. I engaged in several battles, and received more than two thousand sword cuts without being wounded, for I am invulnerable. My body is as hard as rock, and all the weapons that ever were forged could do me no harm. I was wrecked at sea, but I floated like a feather on the water unable to drown myself. I care not for drink or food of any description. I am proof against sickness and disease, and I can never, never die. I have already traveled round the world four times, I have seen great changes everywhere, cities ruined, countries desolated, armies slaughtered, governments overthrown, the whole aspect of society transformed, but for myself, I cannot change my destiny. Even while I sit here, I feel as if standing on burning coals, my feet move against my will, impatient to commence my wandering life." And the Wandering Jew, making a profound bow to the company, arose for his fifth journey around the world.

WOMAN'S "THIRTY POINTS."—An old Spanish writer says that a woman is quite perfect and absolute in beauty if she have thirty good points. Here they are: Three things white—the skin, the teeth the hands. Three black—the eyes, eyebrows and eyelashes. Three red—the lips, the cheeks, the nails. Three long—the body, the hair, the hands. Three short—the teeth, the ears, the feet. Three broad—the chest the brow, the space below the eyebrows. Three narrow—the mouth, the waist, the instep. Three large—the arm, the hip, the calf. Three free—the fingers, the hair, the lips. Three small—the breast, the nose, the head. Thirty in all.

An English engineer has invented a printing press which will print 23,000 sheets of a newspaper on both sides in an hour. The paper from which it prints is in the web on the reel and after passing under the type is cut in sheets. The machine does without feeding, and the reel of paper that it feeds from is unwound by its own action.

A woman was testifying in behalf of her son and swore "that he had worked on the farm ever since he was born." The lawyer who was cross-examining her said: "You assert that your son has worked on a farm ever since he was born." "I do."

"What did he do the first year?" "He milked."

The lawyer evaporated.

A young lady who encouraged the addresses of a lover whom she intended to marry, provided she didn't get a better offer, complained of him that he lacked animation. But when taking offense at her coquetry, he married her rival Anna—she changed her tone and complained that he was too Anna-mated.

A WISE ANSWER.—You must not play with that little girl, my dear, said an injudicious parent.

But ma, I like her she is a good little girl, and I'm sure she dresses as neat as I do, and has plenty of toys.

I cannot help it, my dear, responded the foolish mother, her father is a shoemaker.

But I don't play with her father, I play with her; she ain't a shoemaker.

Notice.—We are daily receiving orders to and by mail for one or more of Dr. Hurd's Dental Remedies, which we cannot fill. None are available except the Neuralgia Plaster, which we send on receipt of Price (15 cents) and one stamp. But to accommodate persons in places where the druggists and storekeepers are behind the age, we have put up packages in white embossed boxes, seven inches by four, with compartments—each box containing a bottle of Dr. Hurd's Mouth Wash, and Toothache Drops a box of Tooth Powder, the Neuralgia Plaster, and a valuable little Treatise on Teeth and their Diseases, the best means of preserving them, and the proper treatment of Children's Teeth, worth of itself the entire cost to every young man or woman, or parents with young children; with sundry other articles; price per package one dollar, or six packages for $5, sent by express as directed. As the Express charges are not much, if any more on a dozen than on one, it is far cheaper to order six or dozen packages at a time. A large family will want all, or the surplus can be disposed of to neighbors with public benefit, for no one can estimate how much pain, suffering, unhappiness, and disfigurement, expense, loss of time and money would be saved to the country if every family to day had one of these packages, which, in itself, is a complete set of Dental Remedies. Address Wm. B. Hurd & Co. Tribune Building New York, and write name and address plainly. That remittances may be made with confidence. W. B. H. & Co. refer to the Mayor of Brooklyn, to G. W. Griffith, President of the Farmer's and Citizen's Bank, Brooklyn; to the Editors of the American Manufacturers' Gazette; to J. V. Cox Co., Publishers' Agents, New York; to Robert R. R. Esq., who know a good P. T. When they see it and who has already had his second supply, etc. 1000 Agents Wanted: To introduce Dr. Hurd's Dental Remedies into every County. Men or Women who want to make money quickly, can do better with these articles than anything in market. They are new, useful, low priced, and we are spending thousands in advertising them for the benefit of agents. Boxes of samples containing one dozen of the one dollar packages above specified, with circulars will be sent, on receipt of seven dollars, about half price, to any person wishing to test his or her skill in selling with the view of becoming an agent. They can be sold in a day. We would rather pay salaries than Commissions to those who prove themselves efficient salesmen. Now is the time to get into business. For address and references see the above.
