

Benjamin F. Butler.

The gentleman that heads this article has been relieved from active duty and allowed to report to the War Department from Lowell Massachusetts. This is one good thing that Mr. Lincoln or Stanton has done. His great success at Wilmington in destroying Fort Fisher by blowing up a ship in the bay, and his genius in canalizing is said to have been the cause of his retirement. This disgusting beast goes home loaded with riches. We clip the following from the New York World of Wednesday and Thursday last.

BUTLER.

OBITU, JANUARY 7 1865.

It would be ridiculous to say of Butler that he is, simply, dead. Like some heap of offal flung from out a window in the night—an odorous warning to the feet and nostrils of pedestrians at dawn—this creature, named a General by power, and called the Beast by lips too untidy to be wholly just, lies worse than dead.

Dead, even a Butler might be entitled to human charity. But that rule of fair play, which forbids to strike a man who is down, does not apply to Butler living. So far beneath the notice that ceases at the purchase, and vanishes in the shadow of misfortune, is the sentiment which every honorable citizen feels for this embodied disgrace to American manhood, that it contains "not pity, nor charity, nor the semblance of consideration." Hereafter, please Heaven, it is not an armed and petted despot with whom the scorn and detestation of the country has to deal. Some one spot surely exists in the course, hyena nature which has so long been suffered to fatten in the cemetery of a nation's hopes, that, shorn of military armor, must be sensitive to kicks. The administration has set the example. With one herculean hoist of his official hat, either Mr. Lincoln or Secretary Stanton has sent poor Butler careering on his way from Fortresses Monroe to Lowell, there to receive, it is devoutly to be hoped, a salute from the collective cowards of all who rejoice in the dispensation of poetical justice.

Yet, who shall read the riddle of his wondrous fall? So faithful a servant, so patient a disciple, so advanced an apostle of those creeds and policies which his masters adopted and best loved, had never been known before. From there this sudden lesson that something worse than death may follow fawning is hard, indeed, to bear.

Were there no more tales of human lives wherewith to heap the waste-stack of death that this Demon of the Pitchfork had already piled so high?

Were there no more women to be proclaimed harlots, no more rebels in embryo to be starved into loyalty? Was there dearth of manhood to be outraged, common honor to be squandered at?

Had the dens of northern cities ceased to breed plottings of revolution, that the "fee! law! fun!" of a Blue-Beard seemed no longer to fright the souls of fearful electors?

Had greenbacks fallen so low, had gold become so high, that Butler and the Treasury Department ceased to agree as to the respective shares in each?

Ah, yes! and ah, no! Lives, almost as plentiful as air at the first, wait to be spilled—for nothing. Women there are, hundreds of them in the South and North, whom military tyranny can insult, if it chooses—for nothing. Manhood there is to be dishonored by foul wrong and persecution—for nothing. Plots, hideous plots, for the detraction of Mr. Lincoln and his merry men, are thick as ever all over the North; and as for greenbacks, the plates at Washington are not yet worn out, and the printers—Heaven save the mark—grind out their wages with willing shew.

Only it is time that some one else shall do the military-agency business of the administration, and take the money. The blunders and the rogueries of one man seem not half so great when made by two, or three. It is meet that the servants of Belial shall not be retained to long.

WHO WAS GENERAL BUTLER'S FATHER—A QUESTION FOR ANTIQUARIANS.

To the Editor of the World. Can you inform the undersigned in what year it was that John Butler, the father of General Benjamin F. Butler, was hung by the Spaniards as a pirate in the Island of Cuba? Some say it was in 1816, but according to my recollection of the record as published in the New Hampshire Patriot and Boston papers, it was in the year 1819.

JUNIAS.

[NOTE.—Perhaps the officers of the college which conferred the degree of LL.D upon Butler would like to investigate this subject.]

Some persons say Lincoln made the last call for "Three Hundred Thousand More" in order to accommodate the disappointed office seekers, who labored for his re-election, with the promises of an office for their services. Wonder how many leaguers, war Democrats, and divine stump orators, will accept the general invitation?

The conductor put a man who refused to pay his fare, off the railroad train, near Pittsfield, Pennsylvania, recently, and the man dropped down into the darkness. The conductor presently found that the train had stopped on a bridge over a dry gully, and the man was picked up at the bottom of it, dead.

A fashionable lady being asked how she liked the dinner given at a distinguished post's, her reply was—"The dinner was splendid, but my seat was so prominent from the micknacks, that I could not satisfy my appetite, and the pickled cherries had such a defect on my head, that I had a notion to leave the table; but Mr. — gave some hartshorn resolved in water, which bereaved me."
