

It is all well enough, indeed, it is a complete matter to these against whom it is directed, but what is the use of a waste of so much ink and paper? There is no man who will have the audacity to come before the Senate and claim to speak by authority, and in my name, of any bill of public utility...

to do all the injury in his power. On the 26th inst., his physician, Dr. Price, of Randolph, was attacked by him, while prescribing for his disorder, knocked down and kicked and beaten with a stick. The next night he attacked the house of Mr. Sanford, beating in one of the windows with a club, and flourishing a knife, so that he would murder the family. He said he "threw" blood and blood he had "laid" on "He was prevented from going further by Mr. Terry, and from there he went to the house of Mr. Terry, on the same errand, but was kept at bay from there by Mr. Ward's, inquired for Mr. W., and was told by his wife that he was absent. He replied that he must go too. Instead of leaving the premises he went round to the other side of the house, broke in the east window and entered the house, seized a chair and broke in the north window, and attempted to break in the chamber door, which Mrs. W. and her daughters within were holding, to prevent his entrance. Failing in this, he tried to force some clothing which he found in the room, he threw it on the fire he had kindled, and returned through the window he had entered. The fire was extinguished with trifling loss.

The maniac having gone from there to the house of Mr. Sabin, he broke in and said, "I have got you now." Mr. S. and his wife said to their eight children to get into their neighbor, Mr. Sewell's, house, and to get into the house of Mr. Sewell's, on the 26th inst. On arriving at Mr. Sewell's house, he was met by a blow from Mr. S., and a notice that he would shoot him if he came further, when he retreated.

On the next morning between daylight and sunrise, Mr. Ensign, on hearing of the cause of it, and on opening the door, received a blow on the head with an axe in the hands of Chittenden, inflicting a frightful wound, and paring off a portion of the scalp and skull some two or three inches in diameter. Mr. Ensign called for help, and Mr. Deering and Mr. Sewell being called on hand, gave immediate assistance, and after a violent struggle, succeeded in fastening the maniac's arms, so that he would be prevented from doing further injury.

During the scuffle he aimed a blow at Ensign's head with the axe, which was warded off by Mr. Deering, but one more successful struck Mr. Ensign's daughter, who was endeavoring to get her brother away from danger, prostrating her senseless on the floor, with the chair on her forehead. A frightful wound was inflicted on the skull, the skull fractured, leaving no hopes of her recovery.—Porter's Sentinel.

Practical Democracy.—The Boston Times, in a late number, gives us the following anecdote, and we pass it over to our readers with more gratification, inasmuch as it goes to prove that the charge of favoritism to his relations cannot be laid at the door of the President.

One day last week, a number of worthy and substantial farmers and drovers who had been attending the Cambridge Cattle Market, congregated in the temporary depot at Porter's station, and the conversation turned on politics. Some of the assembly were either whigs or free-soilers, and the way the Nebraska bill, the President Judge Douglas, etc., were handled was a caution to the friends of non-intervention. Presently, a sturdy looking farmer with a clear pair of eyes and an honest face, put a question to the effect of the declaimers—an out-and-out abolitionist—which immediately attracted the attention of the whole company to himself.

The conversation then proceeded, but had not progressed far beyond the platitudes of the abolitionists, when the whig, who had talked in the common-sense arguments of the farmer. This was acknowledged on all sides, except of course by his opponent, and satisfied with his victory, the farmer modestly retired from the place, leaving the company at liberty to scan his arguments and gush about himself at their leisure.

He talked like a book, said one. "Yes," he hardly broke in, "but well posted up," remarked another. "He looked rough, but he talked like a lawyer," observed a third. "But who is he?" was the question generally put. At this moment Murray, the depot master, who had been questioned by their speculations, stepped to the front in his quiet, peculiar way, and said that it was Mr. Henry Perry of Hillsborough, New Hampshire.—Boston Herald.

At a recent meeting of the City Council, Mr. Pierce regularly attends the Cambridge Cattle Market every week, with the products of his farm, an honest, high minded, intelligent and patriotic American citizen. What an interesting spectacle does this present? He was the brother of the Chief Magistrate of one of the greatest nations on the face of the globe—a person qualified to fill many responsible posts, yielding handsome pecuniary emoluments—pursuing the hard and arduous profession of a lawyer, and an American farmer, while a word from his brother could place him where his purse might be easily and lawfully gorged with the glittering cash of the public treasury. This is one among the many instances of the single heartedness and unselfishness of the President of the United States.—FRANKLIN PIERCE.
