driven them Now and then, a flash—as if the blaze had caught a dry twig—shot arrowy beams out through the thicket, and then fell flickering back within the encroaching darkness The fire was evidently neglected.

"They are all asleep," thought Edgar.

The flanks had gradually converged, according to the plan laid down; and they were so thrown forward as to form a half-circle, covering three sides of the little thicket, and all about equally distant from the fire. The captain gave signal for a halt, and the word passed in whispers either way: the dusky forms stood still, and—unaware of their presence—one could not have distinguished them from the trees among which they were standing Edgar passed slowly from one end of the line to the other, whispering his orders to each man, and endeavoring to see through the thicket to the bivouac It was too dense to allow a fair view; but he could see deep shadows on the ground, like sleeping men, and —between two of these—there seemed one clothed in white, as if the wedding dress of his stolen bride.

He returned, without delay, to his post in the centre; and, silently, the advance commenced It was like the grasp of the deadly hand, closing fatally; for none within that charmed circle, might escape its implacable gripe

No sound—not even the breaking of a twig—invaded the stillness, for a space of time which, in the intensity of expectation, seemed an hour The fire had rapidly fallen to mere cinders, and its light faded to a faint glow, upon the adjacent thicket The rangers flitted silently from tree to tree, like moving shadows Each carried his gun poised low, in readiness for immediate action; and each placed his hand upon his knife, for the conflict—man to man. They gradually closed in, until the flanks met upon the farther side, and a cordon was drawn around the thicket, less than twenty paces across The fate of the slumbering savages seemed sealed, for these were men who never spared an enemy, and never shrank from battle.

Not the stirring of a leaf betrayed their presence, as they paused for the last time, awaiting the signal from their leader The click of a rifle lock was heard—clearly audible in the moonlight stillness; a rush, a bound, a crashing through the brittle undergrowth, and the whole band, as if moved by one spring, stood round the smouldering fire, gazing wildly into each others' faces

There was no one there! They had been creeping—with the deadly stealth of their craft—upon a deserted bivouac Even Edgar's keen and practiced eyes had been deceived by the reposing shadows; and the white ashes of a log, which had, burnt calmly down where it lay, had been conjured by his imagination into the bridal dress of the captive

The fire had evidently been burning, without being replenished, for many hours

"We have nothing for it now, boys," said Edgar, when they had a little recovered from the surprise, "but to wait for daybreak, and then endeavor to recover the trail"

Within ten minutes, the whole party was asleep

CONJUGAL AFFECTION —One of our merry friends hands us the following, for the Berkshire Co Eagle, which is very "coot" in him

A wealthy Dutch farmer in Pennsylvania, having the misfortune to lose his wife by death, went to the store of Messrs. Duncan & Foster to buy some crape

It was a peculiarity of the worthy man, when ever he met either of the firm, to use the partnership name in full, and on the morning in question he began as usual

"Coot morning, Misder Duncan & Vauster"

"Good morning, Mr. Fike"

"Mr Duncan & Vauster, 'ave you eot any o dem tings vot dey put around te hats ven de mammies tie?"

"I suppose you mean crape, Mr. Fike"

"Yes, grapes, grapes, dem's um, dat's vot Bets told me Misder Duncan & Vauster, vill you measure off enough of dem grapes vot vill go around my hat? Sad vorlt dis, Misder Duncan and Vauster, sad vorlt, sad vorlt"

"Yes, Mr Fike, we have heard of your late misfortune, and sympathize with you warmly"

"Oh tear, tear, tear! I had rader lose any one of my horses; and den, she was such a boogur to work"

☞ It appears that Mr Cutting has been in "training" for a "proper discharge of his Congressional duties" The Mirror says "he is the best shot we have in our pistol galleries, has carte and tierce at his finger ends, understands the "manly art" quite as well as any private gentleman that we know of, and has withal the courage to stand square up to the rack, whether right or in the wrong. To the proof Mr Hosack, the celebrated surgeon, challenged Mr. Cutting to meet him at any time or place, and with any weapon, but the Doctor thought better of it, and let him pass. Com McDonough, when a client of his, once sent him an invitation to meet him with whatever weapon he might select Mr C. choose nature's own, and, in his office, after directing the clerks to keep the room clear, gave the Commodore a pummeling that he long remembered He will make Mr. Breckenridge rue this quarrel, whether he prefers pistols, rifles, small swords, closed digits, brick bats at twenty paces, or raw hides at two"

A REMARKABLE RECOGNITION —A short time ago, whilst Ruffin's band from Richmond, was playing at the Eastern Lunatic Asylum, in Williamsburg, Va., for the gratification and amusement of the inmates, one of them, a negro woman, who had been an the hospital for many years, suddenly stepped forward and pointed out a member of the band, and exclaimed, "There is my son, whom I have not seen since he was two years old" The musician was greatly surprised, at first, but, upon enquiring, he was convinced that his mother stood before him—a being whom he had never before known, and whom he had no recollection of ever having seen We understand he asked permission of the Board of Directors to have his parent restored to him, which was granted, and he has taken her home to Richmond, after confinement in the hospital twenty-three years —Virginia Gazette

A NEW CLAIMANT TO THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE HULSEMANNS LETTER —The question about the French Prince is destined to "pale its ineffectual fires" before the graver question which, it seems, by a letter from one of our Boston correspondents, Mr Everett has just been raising about the Hulsemann letter Mr Everett claims that thunder, it seems, and if he is entitled to it, we see no reason why he should not have it. It did not make Mr. Webster President, and no one expects now that it ever will.—Mr. Everett, thinks, probably, it will better his chances; if so he ought to have the benefit of it, and we hope the executors of Webster will give him a quit-claim at once —N. Y Eve Post

WOMAN'S RIGHTS —The ladies of Steuben, Me., incensed at the backwardness and stupidity of their lords, lately got up a ball on their own account. Three female managers hired the hall, furnished refreshments, sent cards of invitation to about forty gentlemen, had a regular shave-down or dance with them, waited upon their mail partners to supper, and paid the bills! They were unable to procure a female violinist, but got over the difficulty by dressing up a man in petticoats.

☞ There is talk that Santa Anna will divorce his present wife if he can negotiate a marriage with one of the daughters of the Queen Dowager of Spain. His present wife was born in Westerlo, Albany county, N. Y., and her maiden name was Lapaugh.

☞ "It is well to leave something for those who come after us," as the gentleman said who threw a barrel in the way of a constable who was chasing him.
