NOAH COTTON. BY MRS. MOODIE. A short time after this conversation took place by the side of Dorothy Grimshawe, a report spread that the road between the town of...

"The shame would all be on his side then," quoth the incorrigible Bob. "I did not make him the bad man he was, though he made me."

"So," she said, liberally, "you make the thunder a pretext for showing your painted doll's face to the fellows here. Your mother would do well to keep you at home."

"My both are engaged," was the curt reply of the merry dame. "You how long have you been subject to these fits?"

"I have already told you, I have no bed to spare," she said, with a grim smile. "I don't like your hangings, and want none of your company."

"Can you give me a bed and a room to myself, where I could sleep the effects of it quietly off?"

"You are ill," said the stranger, "and she examined his countenance with a degree of interest and attention which hitherto had been foreign to her nature, who had never seen anything to love or admire beyond herself."

"Dear child," and Noah wound his arm about her waist, and kissed away the tears from her bright blue eyes. "If you could but see and understand me, you would be as good as cured."

"I will be as rich as a Jew," whispered Noah, in her ear. "Mother, he is as rich as a Jew," whispered Noah, in her ear.

"The South has not gained any thing by the destruction of the Missouri Compromise line, but on the contrary, it has most decidedly lost."

"The Nashville Whig says: 'A warrant was issued in New Orleans last Thursday for the arrest of a free colored woman, named Margaret Peron, who was alleged to be in the habit of ill treating her slaves, and using instruments of torture in their punishment.'
