Pour Jollybones was once made brave in spite of himself, and for want of anything better, he has determined or rather, is compelled to dish up the "facts and circumstances"

Jollybones has traveled some-been "through" many places, stopped in many towns, and resided in others. One of these feeders is located in Rochester, and draws its daily rations from the clear waters of the Gennesce. It was upon this feeder that the present scene occurred. The time was the season that youths like to indulge rather freely in water taken outwardly. I do not suppose any of my readers ever took a above rates.

I will be more definite in time if possible, and some right out and plainly say, it was swimming time. This I believe is understandable, though not mentioned in common or uncommon almamos, for all boys from the patent leather boot variety, down through the kip and cowhide and shoe and apron kind, are invariably posted in the

There is no mistake about it, Jollybones was a boy-don't interrupt me and say I am one now -and like other boys, delighted in swimming; and occasionally, as the story will soon prove, was seen laving in the clear waters of the feeder, which I have taken so much pains to describe and locate. Now, as I want the reader to unand loss to. But the project was broached, and in true boyish spirit some urchin who had above the water. But the project was broached, and in true boyish spirit some urchin who happened to be seated upon the banks, began crying "yer dasent.do it". This brought out what Sidom owned would call pride and vanity of life. Boyish blood has seldom "stood" a "dasent," and it did not do it in this case, for Jollybones and some fond mother's Billy were soon upon the bridge rails. The evidence was conclusive, howbridge rails. The evidence was conclusive, however, that the distance from the water to the bridge was not near so far, as the distance from the bridge to the water, for while it required no nerve to get upon the bridge, it took a good deal to get off with credit. Billy was the largest boy and of course the rest looked to him to "jump" and of course the rest looked to him to "jump first," but he did not like the idea, and was half determined to make poor Jollybones jump first, but your humble servant had no idea of jumping first, in fact had thought discretion the better part of valor, and was determined not to jump at the street of valor, and was determined not to jump at the street of the stre much to the discomfiture of both of us. At last Billy grew desperate and bounded into the water; a moment afterwards he was admiring my figure and joining in the approbious cry Belove be jumped, I could have walked down and not refelt bad," but after his successful and unbarined leap, to do so was equally as impossible as it was to jump, and so I walked from one end of the bridge to the other, always with the determinance of the bridge to the other, always with the determinance of the bridge to the other, always with the determinance of the property of nation of jumping when I reached the middle, the middle, the store of and when I had walked these, determining not to jamp!
