Select Poetry. -----A THOUGHT IN SPRING. BY WILLIAM HOME WALLACE.

I know it is sweet when the dawning Epring First comes with ber fugers full of fowers, And we see the gleam of the blue-bird's wing At its olden play on the sprouting bowers I know it is sweet for the bounding vein To feel in the air the warm young beam, While the senses fleat in the flowing strain, From the windy leaf and the winding stream; There's a gladness borns on the lightest breezes Them's a mystic glory to the sight: And every breath that we draw in these Is itself to the heart a deep delight. But a fluer giery appears to me, And a deeper meaning to my soul Comes out in the bud of the greening tree, And the beaming sky and the billows' rull -Tis an image all of the heart that springs From the ley coil of Error's suske, Where he lies with his large and losthsome rings In the wintery deep of falsebood's brake. 'Tis an emblem bright of the after time When the soul shall burst from the body's temb And her wings shall wave in the Eden slime

That is wrapp'd in a glow of deathless bloom. Oh' yes, it is these in the Spring that make Such a rapture o'er the sky and sod. While we feel the smallest creatures take A sweet, wild joy, and the plain and lake Must summer soon in the smile of Gudi
