In the sky the bright stars glittered, On the grass the mocalight fell, Hashed the sound of daylight's bustle, Closed the "Pink-eyed pimpernell," As a down the moss-grown wood path-Where the cattle love to roam-From aunt Pattie's quilting party I was seeing Nelly home.

Jetty ringlets softly fluttered, O'er a brow as white as snow. And her cheek!-the crimson sunset Searcely had a warmer glow; 'Mid her parted lips' vermilion, White teeth flashed liked ocean foam All I marked, with pulses throbbing, While I saw sweet sweet Nelly home.

When the Autamn tinged the green wood, Turning all its leaves to gold, In the lawn by alders shaded I my love to Nelly told; As we steed together gasting On the star beepangled dome How I blessed the August evening When I saw sweet Nelly home.

White hairs mingle with my tresses Farrows steal upon my brow, But a love-smile cheers and blesses Life's declining momonts now; Matron in the enowy 'kerchief, Closer to my bosom some-Tell me, dost thou will remoraber When I saw sweet Nelly lie in ?

The Wild Man of the Woods.

The Chicago Press publishes a communication from Belvidere, Ill., dated Jane 20th which

The man running wild in the woods near this place has not, up to the present writing, been captured. I have taken some pains to inquise of those who have seen him, and his descriptions. swere so nearly to that of Mr. Mellen, that there seems searcely a doubt that he is the man. He has been round here about a week, and searcely a day has passeed that he has not been seen by some one. He is naked or nearly so, and appears to be afraid of men, as as he always makes of rapidly through the bash when seen by them. He has upon offe or two occasions, however, chasod children who were in the woods gathering berries. On Sunday last, about fifty men were after him, and on Monday and yesterday more than this number, but he has cluded, thus far, all

Yesterday he was seen by some Dutchusen. He sprang up from the cover of an old hellow stump, and made off through the brush so rapidly that they could not catch him. The woodsare so thick here, with so many hollow trees and hiding places, that it is very doubtful if he is taken in any other way than by stratigem, as he is very cunning, like all crazy men. His beard is long, hair over his eyes, start naked, scratched and tanned, and, as you may suppose, he is a pitiable looking object. Some have been near enough to speak to him, but got no answer. One man met him, who had a gun, and told him to stop, or he would fire on him. He merely turned his head back, but kept on. What he lives on would be hard to say.
