convenience, they quartered themselves in the house hitherto occupied by the bride; for, to tell the plain truth, old Fundem was a great deal too mean to allow himself bachelor accommodations that were fit to carry even his wife to.

They settled down at once, therefore, and tried to keep quiet. He was thinking what fine comforts he had; she was wondering when he would talk to her of going into some place a great deal more expensive and luxurious. Their inward thoughts were directly at cross-purposes; and yet nothing was said-not a word was hinted-not a syllable was lisped. On the surface, all was peaceful as a millpond in a summer sun-

Weeks went away. Three months. The honey moon was over for ever. Hopes were White Lead, Tanner's Oil, Lard Oil, Teeth, Gold trying every day to take the shape of realities. Aiready three months had gone. Old Fumfum Perfumery, Brushes, Paints, Oils and Dye felt more and more contented in his corner, and Mrs. Fumfum felt more and more messy as she walked wildly over the house.

Her husband came in one afternoon, and accosted her in a manner that led her to suppose he had something on his mind "Well" said he, in a tone that cannot very well be described. "Well" she returned, giving her voice the rising inflection, as if she was anxious for him to begin and enlighten her.

And just here the matter dropped. One day she went out Alone? Of course she went alone Could people expect her to display the rare beauty of her figure and carriage, with an old man tottering along by her side, his eyes filled with water, and himself leaning on her for support? What nonsense When she came in again he looked up inquiringly in her face, in and must be paid. The Books of Account are with Mr. his turn

"Well!" said he, as if he knew she had something important to communicate. "Well." she answered, waiting for him to begin, but waiting altogether in vain And so much came of it this time.

Finally it got so that almost every day he said Weill' to his wife, and she answered as regularly-"Well" to him Each of them knew that the other had a secret to impart.
