Believe me, you have, and always have had, my deepest and truest sympathy; but Adela is my sister; what more can I say?"

Mr. Grubb left the room, with a cloud upon his brow, but with a deeper cloud upon his heart.

Lady Grace sat on, alone. The murmur of gay voices came to her from the adjacent room, but she heeded it not. She leaned her head upon her hand, and debated with herself. It was imperative that the real facts of the case should be brought to light: for if Charles Cleveland were permitted to suffer the penalty of transportation, and it came out, later, that he was innocent, and her sister the guilty party, what a fearful position would be that of Lady Adela!

Could Charley not be brought to confess through stratagem? debated Lady Grace. Suppose they made believe that Adela, to save him, had declared the truth, then he might speak.—It was surely a good idea. Grace weighed it, in all its bearings, and determined to carry it out. But to whom entrust so delicate a mission?—Not to Mr Cleveland, he would betray it all to Charles at the first sentence. Not to Mr. Grubb, his high sense of honor would never let him assert that Lady Adela had confessed what she had not: not to Lady Mary, for her only idea of Newgate was that it was a place overflowing with infectious fevers, which she should inevitably bring home to baby. Who next? Herself?—Yes: for Grace Chenevix felt that none were so fitted for the task as she was—she who had the subject so much at heart. So she made a confidant of her mother, and the day for the expedition was fixed.

Charles Cleveland sat on his iron bedstead, in his cell, coldly, chewing the end of his reflections, which came crowding one upon another. None of them were agreeable, as may be imagined, but pressing, most keenly of all, was one sensation of deep, dark disappointment. Above the discomfort of his present position, above the sense of shame endured, above the dread of the hard, degrading life that loomed for him in the future, was the unkind neglect of the Lady Adela.—She, for whom he was bearing this misery and disgrace, had never, by her presence, by letter, or by message, sought to convey a ray of sympathy to cheer him in his dungeon. It may be she was afraid, but it told not the less bitterly on the spirit of the prisoner.

A noise at his cell door, the heavy key was turning in the lock, and the prisoner looked up eagerly—a visit was such a break in his dreary day. Two ladies were entering, and his heart beat wildly—wildly; for in the form of one he discerned a likeness to Lady Adela. Had she come to see him? and he had been so ungratefully blaming her! But the lady raised her veil, and he was recalled to his sober senses. It was only Grace Chenevix.

"So, Charles, an awful scrape you have brought yourself into, through your flirting nonsense with Adela," began the Countess of Oakton.

"Now, mamma, dear mamma, implored Lady Grace, in a whisper, if you interfere, you will ruin all.

Ruin all! much obliged to you, Grace; I think he has ruined himself, retorted the countess, in a shrill tone. I wonder, Charles, you can look us in the face. If any one had told me I should ever walk through Newgate, surrounded by turnkeys! We came in a hack cab: I wouldn't have brought the servants here for the world.

I shall ever feel grateful to you, began Charles.

Oh, never mind about gratitude, discreetly but impudently interrupted Lady Oakton, there's no time for it. Not as say what we have to say, Grace, and be gone. I am all in a tremor, lest those men with keys should come and lock me up.—Of course, Charles, you know it has all come out.

Charles looked up sharply.

Which is more luck than you could have expected, said the countess, while Lady Grace sat wringing her unstable fingers, you have come out the best. If Adela could be such a thoughtless, wicked creature as to write to me my daughter to go to her husband's banker for a cheque, was that any reason she should go and be locked up with you, and make believe you did it? Grubb is not your husband, and you have no right to his money. Things that the law will permit a man to do with impunity, you might be run up to the drop for.

Who has been saying this? uttered the prisoner, in bewildered wilderment. Surely not Lady Adela!

Charles interrupted Lady Grace, and her quiet tones, after those of the countess, sounded like the tolling of a requiem, there is no necessity for further mystery, or for your continuing to assume the guilt, which, as my mother says, was [illegible] step on your part——

I beg to say, unwise, sharply interrupted the countess, still things by their right names, Lady Grace. It was insanity, and nobody but an idiot would have done it. That's what I said.

The murderous cuts are known to us now, went on Lady Grace. Poor Adela at her wits' end for money, drew the cheque, and sent you to cash it. And then, terrified at what she had done, pretended you'd to assume the guilt.

She did not persuade me, retorted Charles, falling completely into the snare, and still anxious to screen Lady Adela: I volunteered to bear it. And I would do as much again

Charles, if you were present when she wrote the check—I did not inquire, and Adela did not say—you were doubly to blame. She, poor thing, was excited at the moment, and incapable of reflection, but you ought to have reasoned with her and refused to aid in it—for her own sake.

And of course I should, eagerly answered Mr Charles, had I known there was anything wrong about it. She brought me the cheque ready written——

When you went up from the city for the cheque book, on the Saturday morning. Yes?

Yes. I declare I thought it was Mr Grubb's writing at first. I saw his writing in my life. I washed likely to think anything else, having no suspicion. And I knew nothing more about it till Monday night when I came up from Brighton.—as I suppose Lady Adela has told you, as she has told you the rest.

And there you are in check to shield her, interposed Lady Oakton, and a glorious mess you have made of it between you. Grace how you worry; you can speak when I have done. What she did would have been hushed up by Mr Grubb, for all our sakes, but what you did was a different matter. And now the disgrace has been blazoned forth to every corner of the United Kingdom.

"And to me are all the thanks I get," remarked Charles, striving to speak lightly

"What others would you like?" questioned the countess; "a service of plate presented to you? You deserve it, I think, to have run your head into a noose for a married woman. And Adela, of all others, who cares for nobody on earth but her blessed self! not she."

"My mother is right," said Lady Grace, "and it may be as well, Charles, that you should know it. Adela has never cared for you, more than for another. If you have given undue love to her—which you ought not to have done—it has been thrown away. I tell you"

He bit his dry and fevered lips with mortification—fevered for her—and the countess hurried Lady Grace away

A capital success we have met with, Grace she led, when they got outside the stone walls, but it is all thanks to me. I got it out of him nicely alike a green sea-gull as he is. But, Grace, my child—and Lady Oakton's voice grew hushed and solemn—what in the world will be done with Adela.

What, indeed! Lady Oakton soon knew

That which the insults, the scorn of years, had failed to effect on Mr. Grubb's heart, was now accomplished. From the hour of his enlightenment, he was a changed man; his consideration for her had become contempt, his love hatred. Not with her did he enter into negotiations for their separation, but with her parents. The merchant proposed to allow her a liberal maintenance, and the earl and countess agreed to receive her back in her maiden home. The scene which ensued between her and her husband, when the news of his fat had burst startlingly [illegible] humiliation, to her, than any she had hitherto held part in. For she was kneeling to him in her terror and distress, kneeling to supplicate his mercy. Lady Adela, so alive to the opinion of the world, would almost have preferred death, than that her husband should condemn her to a forced separation.

I have been very wrong; she implored, the tears streaming down her cheeks; I have not behaved as I ought from the time of our marriage; I acknowledge it. Forgive me what is past, and in future I will be all that a wife ought.

Do not humiliate yourself by kneeling to me, Lady Adela—and his tone had no relenting in it. I pray you rise.

Not till you say you forgive me, was her rejoinder, clasping his knees, and laying her tearful face against them. Do not let me kneel to you in vain—my husband.

Lady Adela, but a short while ago it was my turn to supplicate you. I told you I would protect, forgive, and shield you. I solemnly prayed you to trust in me—your husband—as you wished it to be well with us in our future life. Do you remember your answer.

She moaned aloud—her only answer now.

As you rejected me, so must I reject you.

I will give up play—I will be all you wish—a man may not reject his wife, she wildly urged.

He may—when he has sufficient reason. Look at all you have dealt to me. Few men could have borne with you as I have done. I loved you with a true and lasting love: how have you repaid it to me

Try me once again—a month—a week—let me still live on, your wife. I will indeed be all you wish. Only try me.

It may not be, he coldly said My resolution has been deliberately taken, and I cannot change it on impulse

Later then, she panted, try me later. Oh, mercy! mercy!

Neither now nor later. My feelings were long, long outraged, and I bore with you; but in this last fearful act, you have broken all allegiance, and thrown off my protection. Lady Adela, I shall never inhabit the same roof with you again

She continued her distressing appeal—Mercy! mercy! But her once fond husband gently unwound the clasp of her arms, laid her on a sofa, and escaped from the room and the house. He did not enter it again until she had finally left it

When the day of Charles Cleveland's trial came, there was no prosecutor, so he was discharged No explanation had been given to Charley's friends in the fashionable world, but an understanding had somehow gone forth among them, coupled with a curious whisper about Lady Adela, that he was not guilty, and had been wrongfully accused. They received him with a noisy welcome, each one contesting who should make the most of him.

But Charles Cleveland was a changed man. His confinement and reflections in Newgate had added years to his experience in life, and the heartless conduct of Lady Adela filled his soul with wrath and bitterness. For, heartless as she had been to him in prison, so she remained in the interview, which he sought with her, after he came out of it

What name do you now give to that devoted chivalry of yours, Charles, asked Lady Grace Chenevix, with a smile, when she was bidding him adieu, the day of his departure for [illegible], a post in the civil service at Bombay having been obtained for him

INFATUATION, replied Mr. Charles, savagely

That was just it, said Lady Grace. Take care of yourself for the future.

If ever I get trapped by a woman again, all courtly smiles one day, when she wants her turn served, and careless neglect the next, like a confounded weather cock, I'll give you leave to transport me in earnest, was Charley's wrathful answer But God bless you, Grace, he added, changing his tone to one of deep feeling, for I owe it to you, and not to her, that I am not now on my free passage to Norfolk Island

And the Lady Adela? She is an unhappy woman, dragging on a discontented existence under her father's roof, wishing, how vainly, that she had not forfeited her married home We never know the value of a thing till we have lost it Strange to say, that feeling of admiration and esteem, which others felt for her husband, has now been awakened in her own breast, and she would forfeit half her remaining existence to be allowed to return to him, and atone for days gone by But she knows that this can never be, that they shall not be reunited on this side the grave, that when her husband threw her off, he threw her off for ever.

DROLL AMUSEMENT.—The ladies of New Zealand, according to an English Missionary, have a way of their own to divert themselves:

"The chief amusement of the people was, and, still is tangi, or crying. The ladies pride themselves on their doing this in the most affecting way, so that a stranger would be deceived and not think it possible that it could be a mere mockery of wo, and yet it is nothing more; tears are shed in abundance, and the hands are wrung, as if suffering the most poignant grief, whilst the most heart rending cries excite the sympathy of the company. The ladies have their heads adorned with fillets of leaves or dog's hair and so much joy do they experience in this exciting amusement, that they look forward to good crying with the same desire a young lady in England does to a dance or ball"

COLLISION.—An accident occurred on the Uuteral Road at Rochester, night before last—A very heavy freight train from this city was passing through the depot, when a train of three passenger cars was being backed from the East upon a side track The former was under considerable headway, and on account of its being so heavy, its speed could not be checked sufficiently to avoid the collision The Rochester Union says:

"The engineer saw the danger of a collision and blew his whistle fiercely; but it was of no use. The little Providence could not push fast enough to get upon the branch before the freight train came down. The rear passenger coach was just far enough up the branch to have one side of it taken off, and the rest of the train, including the locomotive, were "set back" sum what by the collision. The engine of the other train was driven upon the bridge some distance, and tore off the south railing for eighty feet Had the switch been right for the freight train no doubt the Providence and several cars would have been forced over the bridge into the river

"The two engineer got off the track and some of the freight cars also Some broken pilots, bumpers, &c, made the sum of the damage after the breaking of the passenger coach which took the force of the collision The engines were soon got in place and the cars removed The lack of railing on the bridge alone told of the disaster in a short time after it occurred That must be replaced at once, or some straggler will walk into the river on a dark evening

☞ An Albany paper states that a specimen of the Grenoble Hose has been sent to the foreman of one of the fire companies in that city—This hose is manufactured in Grenoble, France, is made of hemp, and is seamless. It is said to be impossible to burst it, so very strong is it woven. Its cost is 40 cents per foot, whereas leathern hose costs, we understand, 80 cents per foot, or twice as much. Some of our firemen consider it as an improvement on leathern hose, and if this is so, it would be well for our city authorities to order a quantity. If it is better, and the cost one half, there is no reason why they should not do so. It is said to be cleansed much easier, and no 'slushing' with grease is required. The authorities of New York have ordered some 5,000 feet.

☞ A man may think well, and yet not act wisely. The power to see what is right is very different from the power of doing it. A man of moral energy will accomplish more with a little knowledge, than a man of inferior will with much. And strength of will is generally acquired by struggling with difficulties in early life.

A HUMAN LIFE SAVED.

HOWARDSVILLE, Mich., March 11, 1856.

J. A. HERRON, Esq.: Dear Sir—As I took your medicine to sell on consignment, "no cure, no pay," I take pleasure in stating its effects as reported to me by three brothers who live in this place, and their testimony is a fair specimen of all I have received:

W. S. CONKLIN told me—"I had taken nine bottles of Christie's Ague Balsam, and continually run down while using it until my lungs and liver were congested to such a degree that blood discharged from my mouth and bowels, so that all thought it impossible for me to live through another chill. The doctors too did all they could for me, but thought I must die. Nothing did me any good until I got Rhodes' Fever and Ague Cure, which at once relieved me of the distress and nausea at my stomach and pain in my head and prostration, and soon cure to a short time."

H. M. CONKLIN says: "I had been taking medicine of as good a doctor as we have in our county, and taken any quantity of quinine and specifics without any good result, from 26th August to 17th December. But seeing how nicely it operated on my brother, I got a bottle of RHODES' FEVER AND AGUE CURE, which effected a permanent cure by using two-thirds of a bottle.

S. M. CONKLIN was not here, but both the other brothers say his case was the same as H. M.'s. I sold the medicine to both the same day, and the cure was as speedy from the same small quantity, and I might so speedy. Yours with respect, A. HUNTINGTON.

The above speaks for itself. Good proof as it is, it is of no better tenor than the vast number of certificates I have already published and the still greater amount that is continually pouring in to me.

One thing more. Last year I had occasion to "caution the public in these words:—

"I notice one firm who have taken one of my general circulars, substituted the names of their nostrums for my medicine, and then sold brazen impudence and their pamphlet with the endorsements. 'Let the proprietor of any other medicines say as much if he dares,' &c.

Now I take pleasure in saying that the caution referred to the same "Dr. Christie's Ague Balsam" that is mentioned in the above certificate

There are several other industrious people who are applying to their patients all that I published about my Fever and Ague Cure or Antidote to Malaria, except the Certificates of Cures, and the Certificate of the celebrated Chemist, Dr. James R. Chilton, of N. Y., in favor of its perfectly HARMLESS CHARACTER, which is attached to every bottle. I now will always prove to distinguish my medicine from imitations. JAS. A. RHODES, Proprietor

THIS Establishment, of this description of any in the public that they are ready to supply [illegible] quantity, warranting them equal in [illegible] and richness of shade to any species of Paint in use. [illegible] the fact that its [illegible] verbal manufactured being of different colors and shades, and not a foreign color applied to a colorless body [illegible] of uniformity, permanency of durability and color.

An experienced and competent practical chemist, for the last few years has been engaged in experimenting with reference to this subject, and the result of his investigation and experiments is the establishment of the above entitled Works for the manufacture of Paints with A METALLIC BASIS.

We are happy to be at liberty to give the names of individuals, being citizens of different localities, and all some of months worth and standing, who, after having sufficient tested the merits of [illegible] Paints, have kindly volunteered to certify to their worth.

CERTIFICATE.—This may certify that after having used the Paints manufactured by the Presque Isle Metallic Paint Works sufficiently to speak from actual knowledge, do most unhesitatingly say that: from the ease and freedom with which they flow from the brush the amount of surface which a given quantity can cover, the durability and solidity of its finish, is not equalled by any Paint now used by

This may certify that having had occasion to use one of the various colors of Paint manufactured by the Presque Isle Metallic Paint Works, do unhesitatingly say that in our judgment it is all that the proprietors claim, and would recommend its use wherever a reasonable priced, rich colored, durable and permanent paint is required.

From the many flattering testimonials received, I only select the following.

I am much pleased with the appearance of [illegible] Paint and I think every one must be well pleased. It dries rapidly and forms a solid substance, resembling for wood or iron with a handsome rich lively glossy surface. It must succeed. Yours, &c.

I have used two colours of the Metallic Paint on my house this spring. One coat of the Crystal Black will make a better color than a coat of lead covered with a coat of lamp black, and the black thrown in my opinion cannot be excelled. DAVID [illegible]

"Some time last fall I had my front house painted with your Metallic paint. To all appearance it is now as sound as iron, and can make no more impression upon it with your knife than upon a brick house. SEBASTIAN MILLER

You can get two thirds more fine painting out of one Gallon of this paint than two shillings than any other paint I ever used. P. HEARD

We have used the Metallic paint this spring. Find it covers well, spreads with more ease and we believe it to be cheaper, more durable and a better preserver than lead OSBORN & [illegible]

I have used some of the Metallic paints. I am well pleased with its action and appearance, and if it proves durable as I have no doubt it will, it must and will supersede others for [illegible] painting. [illegible]

MERIT vs. BRAG.

DO YOU WISH A GOOD PICTURE!

DOUBTLESS every one who procures a daguerreotype desires to have the "counterfeit presentment" of himself as near perfect as nature, assisted by art, can make it, and to this end, we would advise every body to trust to their own good judgment, rather than that [illegible] puffing, whether such committee acts in the name of the Erie County Agricultural Society, or in the name of any other society. We would also caution those who desire such pictures, to let merit, not brag, decide their choice in selecting an artist. Pretenders can "play upon five hundred strings," and even quote poetry, still such fact does not prove that good Daguerreotypes are "constantly coming" from their so-called "extensive sky-light Daguerrean Galleries." And yet we would not have the public too hard upon the "Agricultural Society" artist, because, "where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise;" or, in the language of a favorite poet, when describing one of human pretensions,

"But 'tis some justice to ascribe to chance,
The wrongs we might expect from ignorance,
None can the models of their creation choose,
We therefore want their ignorance excuse,
When born too low to reach at things sublime,
'Tis rather his misfortune than his crime."

The undersigned would, therefore, say to all those in want of a good Daguerreotype to call at his Gallery, in Brown's Hotel and the Reed House, and examine the best pictures, the best assortment of materials, and the best sky light in this city. Don't be humbugged, for in the language of an eloquent southern brother, "research the scriptures," and you will find that the brag and the [illegible] "plays upon a harp of five hundred strings," and that, like his pictures, there is not one of them "perfect."
