For instance, at this place, upon an examination of the dam they have constructed, I was both astonished and delighted at the wonderful on of the dam they have constructed, I was both astonished and delighted at the wonderful sa-gacity, skill, and preservance which they have displayed. In the selection of a suitable site, and in the erection of the structure, they appear to have been guided by something more than mere animal instingt, and have exhibited as correct a knowledge of hydrostatics; and the action of forces resulting from currents of water, as the most scientific millwright would have done? Having chosen a spot where the banks on each side of the creek were narrow and sufficiently side of the creek were parrow and sufficiently high to raise a head of about five feet, they selec-ted two cotton wood trees about fiteen inches in diameter, situated aboys this point, and having an inclination towards the stream; these they cut, down with their teeth (as the marks upon the stimps plainly showed,) and, floating them down to the position chosen for the dam, they were placed across the stream with an inclination downward, uniting in the centre. This formed the foundation upon which the superstructure of brush and earth was placed, in precisely the same manner as a brush dam is made by our mill-wrights, with the busbes and earth alternating and packed closely, the butts in all cases turned te following the stream.
