On that morning the body of a votag man was found on the railroad track about a half a nile west of that place: his head had been frastured near the eerser of the eye, apparently the effect of a heavy blow; his throat had been out; a raser, a carpet bag, a green bag postaining a vialia, and a bloody stick were found lying on the ground near him. From papers and momoranda found on his person, it was assortained that his name was Somnel T. Novercost of Bast Lozington, Mass., who was on his way from Duploith, Illinois. In his pockets were found a postot book containing $15, and a number of unimportant receipts; his watch also was undistarbed.
