NEW YORK, April 14, 1867. "Snow in summer," the wise preacher remarked somewhere, "is not seemly," and snow on the 12th of April is very disagreeable and unexpected in this latitude. The milliner shops were just beginning to bed and blossom as the rose, and silks of brilliant colors were seen in our streets when down came this white visitation from the skies in great soft falling flakes. There was just about enough of it to lay the dust. By the way, we are having ur streets cleaned at last. This may seem incredible, but it is nevertheless true. All the unfortunate foreigners who sell penny cigars on the corners, or walk about labelled Blind" and "Starving," have been prossed into the ser vice, and, armed with hoes, brooms and shovels.
