

NINE DAYS ADrift ON THE OCEAN!

NARRATIVE OF MR. TICE.

Within half an hour before the Central American it became evident to all that the vessel was sinking...

Soon after the steamer sank, he discovered the lights of a vessel in the distance, which he supposed to belong either to the bark Marine or the schooner (the El Dorado) which they had spoken a short time before the catastrophe...

They were to the leeward of him, and he continued swimming in that direction, until he was able to reach the vessel, but with the disappearance of the lights, about 10 or 12 o'clock, he ceased his efforts...

Monday morning dawned without the presence of anything to cheer his hopes. Occasionally fragments of the wreck, drifting in the Gulf Stream, would be lifted by the waves into view...

At about 9 o'clock on Tuesday morning, after floating with his plank for two or three miles, and without knowing certainly what it was, further than that it seemed to afford a better means of sustaining himself than his plank...

Friday and Saturday brought with them no hopes of success. They had ceased to hunger, but their desire for water knew no bounds...
