THE LAND OF DESAME. BY WH. C. BRYANT. A mighty realm is the land of dreams.

With steeps that hang in the twilight sky, and weltering occases, and trailing streams, That gleam where the dusky valleys lie. But over its shadowy borders flow Sweet rays from a world of sudies morn.

And the mearest mountains eatch the glow, The apuls of the happy dead repair And walk in the fairer glory there,
With the souls of the living, hand to hand.

Ope calm, sweet smile in that shadowy sphere From eyes that open on earth no more-One warning word from a voice once dear-How they ring in the memory o'er. Far of from these bills that shine with the day,

The land of dreams goes stretching away

There lie the champers of guilty delight: There walk the spectres of hope and fear;

Are whispering sin in the guillon cor.

Thine eyes are closed, and over thy brow

Light-hearted maiden, oh heed thy feet (th, keep where that beam of paradise falls

And only wander where thou mayort most The blessed ones from its shiring walls. He shalt thou come from the land of dreams

With love and peace to this world of strife And the fight that over its border streams, Shall lie on the path of thy daily life

If the Convention has no legal authority to make a Constitution without subdicting the whole of it to a popular vote, then this Constitution ought to be treated as a nulity. But whoseever denies the general power of the people to clothe their representatives with full authority to make a Constitution binding on themselves and their constituents, knows not whereof he affirms. All reason as well as precedent is against him.

The power of the Lecompton Convention was certainly not restricted, except on the subject of slavery. But if its members abused their authority by fraudalently inserting any other provision which they knew to be wrong or believed to be disapproved by their constituents, and dishonestly refused to submit it then, it should be regarded with the contempt due to a chest. But where is the evidence of any such fraud? The Convention had no motive to commit it. They and their constituents did not differ on the ne cossity of having a Constitution, nor on any but one subject imbraced within its provisions. On every other subject the unanimity of opinion was as perfect as it ever was in any of those States where a Constitution was not submitted at all. It is easy enough to abuse these men, but a fair minded person will not accuse them without tive. For myself, I think it was not unfair, certainly not fraudulent, for them to adjust all most infamous crimes had been habitually comleave the subjection which there was division to a fair vote of the people.
