THE SUMMER RAIN. BY R. F. BRILLIANT. The farmer's heart was sad, his toil was vain, His plow had been in the field, For not one drop of life-sustaining rain...

A LIFE SCENE. EXTRACT FROM THE DIARY OF A COUNTRY DOCTOR'S WIFE. BY NINA GODDARD. Under the above title we have noticed several spirited sketches of humble life in the State of Maine, in the Portland Transcript, from which we copy the following.

littled eyes to look at me and Eleanor looked out. "Gracious goodness! She ain't bigger than a piece of chalk; but good things come down in little bunches."

After the Doctor had talked with her a few moments he spoke to the old man and they left the room together. We could hear them talking in the next room, and pretty soon his wife followed them. Then came the sound of loud and angry voices, and I found I was not mistaken in thinking she could say harsh things.

THE GERMS OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Scatter the germs of the beautiful, Scatter the germs of the beautiful, Scatter the germs of the beautiful, Scatter the germs of the beautiful.

THE FOUNTAIN VERY FAR DOWN. "I don't believe it," said my cousin Ned when he was passing his college vacation at our house, and there was a world of unwritten skepticism in the air with which he dashed below the paper over whose damp columns his eyes had been travelling for the previous half hour.

How THURLOW WEED GOT THE EIGHT THOUSAND. A correspondent of The Philadelphia Mercury writes the following story: Two or three years ago the railway lines between Albany and Buffalo were consolidated, under the title of the New York Central, Thurlow Weed, of the Albany Evening Journal, engineered the matter through the Legislature, and for this service was to receive the handsome sum of $8,000 and Dean Erasmus Corning was to furnish $4,000 and the money was paid over.

How HE DID IT. A gentleman feeling a strong partiality for a young lady whose name was Noyes, was desirous without the ceremony of a formal courtship, to secure her consent to marry him.
