The Potatoe Rot-Its Cause and Cure.

From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser . Ever since the disease known as potatoe rot first appeared, various hypotheses have been of fered as to its cause and cure. A malady attacktug an esculent so important and forming so large a portion of our daily food, was at once recog! nized as a national disaster, and the researches of scientific men were directed to its study Up to And in fact EVERYTHING won n by Men. the present time no satisfactory theory has been promulgated. In giving publicity to that which we are about to notice, we shall confine ourselves mostly to what has been done by actual experiment, and to the legitimate conclusions which inductive versoning from these experiments at ford. Our personal knowledge is confined to the following facts:

On the morning of the 24th of June, Mr. Al. exander Henderson, of this city, left at our office a glass jar containing a sound and healthy potatoe plant, covered in by perforated paper so as to afford air. He had placed it there at 7 A M, and with it were confined some six or eight in. sects, which Mr. H. believes to be the source of the potatoe rot. The insect itself we cannot describe acientifically. It is about the size of a common house fly, of a brownish color, has six legs, two pairs of disphanous wings, two antaunse, and a long, strong proboscis Mr. H thinks it is the Phytocoris, but is not positive as to that. At the end of twenty four hours the plant was evidently diseased. The insect was actively engaged upon its various portions, which became brown and mouldy in the leaf, while the statks in the course of two or three days suffered a putrescent change, until the 28th, some of them fell over by their own-weight, the stock being swollen and softened, in some places quite to a jelly of a sickly, green color. This process, Mr. Henderson informs us, acts uniformly, but most rapidly when the plant is freely watered and ex-days in a warm moist place. The entire period of development is not settled. Mr. H. exposed a plant to the insect, under proper precautions, and from the time of the exposure to the time the young insect of the next generation obtained his wings, was three months. The process of reproduction has been ingeniously watched by Mr. Henderson. The egg planted with the seed potatoe is hatched, the young insects stay in the ground until they get wings. In the meantime from the warm of said wing revised to the state of the corner of the corner of said wind the seed potatoe is hatched, the young insects stay in the ground until they get wings. In the meantime general of said on a sixth of the seed young of said until they get wings. In the meantime general for said the seed to the sound of said of said on the following revised to the said of the seed young insects stay in the ground until they get wings. In the meantime general large bounded on any of said village bounded on the seed young insects of the seed young of said village bounded on the seed young insects of the seed young of said village bounded on the seed young insects of the seed young of said village bounded on the seed young insects of the seed young of said village bounded on the seed young insects of the seed young of said village bounded on the seed young insects of the seed young of said village bounded on the seed young the seed young real settle. days in a warm moist place. The entire period of development is not settled. Mr. H. exposed tatoe is hatched, the young insects stay in the ground until they get wings. In the meantime he is engaged in stinging the tubers, each performation personing the root and begetting the rot. While yet in the ground, as early as the tenth day of existence, the young insects cahabit, and from the great rapidity with which they proparigate, Mr. H. argues that the egg is deposited before the first emergence from the ground, although in case of cold wet weather, the insect is meant of J. Selden.

Also—all the right, title, interest and circle is ame being in with the leaves the vines and returns to the tuber. Only a few days are required for the emittire dostruction of the vine. The insect is remrk—tire dostruction of the vine the tire of the tire of the tire of the vine is the tire of the vine of the vine is the tire of the vine of the vine is th tuber. Only a few days are required for the entire dostruction of the vine. The insect is remrk, ably industrious, but the destruction of the vines does not effect the tuber except to stop its growth.

Mr. Henderson finds a ready explanation for the healthfulness of the potatoe in sandy soil.—
He finds that the grains of sand greatly annoy and oripple the insect, and as the light soil is heaved up by the growth of the root, the sand impacts or falls down, preventing the access of the ground through the dracks opened by the growth of the tuber, and having stung it, comes to the surface and attacks the vine, especially after heavy showers. During the past winter Mr H has had thousands of young insects hatched uni-der a glass, and to try their power of mischief has experimented with bugs only a quarter grown.

The plants exposed showed unmistkable signs of disease on the tourth day.

These statements we regrrd as important. So These statements we regard as important. So much is evident. Mr. Henderson, by means of this insect, produces potatoe rot at will. When a healthy plant is shown us, the insect applied, and the rot follows in four days with unerring certainty, there is good reason to suppose that the problem has been solved.

As to cure, Mr. Henderson thinks there is no wait of the such the such in the such is the such the such the such to the such the such to the such the there, and therefore the such to the such the land of the hears of John Londing to the such the land of the hears of John Londing to the such to t and the rot follows in four cases with uncertage certainty, there is good reason to suppose that the problem has been solved.

As to cure, Mr. Henderson thinks there is no serious difficulty. If we put a stop to the planting of the egg with the seed potatoe, we stop the propagation of the insect. The egg being nursible, any means applied should be thorough and reach the whole surface of the root. Mr. Henderson states that by sprinkling quick lime over the potatoe, as it is cut for planting, the moisture will dissolve the lime and bathe the tubers in a caustic alkali which will destroy the egg. At this time of the jost the ranges of the insect may be prevented by packing the earth around the tuber firmly with the foot, which will smother the insect. We may add that this is probably the same innect which has recently attacked the grape viage.

Since writing the above, we have found one of the insects in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now rotten vices in our jar, which had descried the now and their results. His frank statements, and his entire desired of any secret means of core, relieve him at conclusion, we would express our thanks to Mr. Henderson for the public spirit he has shown in thus freely disclosing all his observations and their results.

Some pieces of early (this year's) potatoes, placed in the jar were also plain ly attacked by the rot during the four days of exposure.

Mr. Henderson states that he has been engaged in this research since 1845; that in 1850 he discovered the bug on the vines, but thought it was confined to them. During the last year he has found it off the tubers, and watched its effect up on them. It appears on the vines in from two and a half to three months after planting, according to soil and manure, a richly manured soil producing the perfect insect sconer.

The natural hisory of the insect begins with the development of the egg. This is invisible to the naked eye, but can be seen with the aid of a lens, agglutinated to the akin of the potatoe. It is of an oblong form, and is planted with the seed potatoe. The egg may be hatched in six days in a warm moist place.
