Hymn of the Atlantic Cable. From the Courier and Enquirer. Bow, Science, bow thy head in awe, With lightning chain in hand, Be still, as through the ocean's depths

Thou bindest land to land; For thou hast wrought a miracle, Next to the Son of God, Thou walkest down on sea's dark floor. High on its waves He trod ;

And wind and wave, which yield to Him, Thou hast the power to brave ,

Then tremble thou before thyself, So near to God akin, That to thy hand Ris power comer, And seems to dwell therein;

And husbed and frembling thank the Lord For favor on thee shed, That thou, through sea, with lightning chain, Two Continents has wed.

Louis Mapoleon as He Is.

To attempt to gain a correct idea of any great man during his life, is like endeavoring to appreciate the beauty of a colossal bronze statute just taken in fragments from the mould. An arm here a leg there the levely countenance and bust beside the beautiful but enormous lega-all this is puzzling, laughable and yet imposing to most persons, and even the artist, aided by the original drawing, can only form a relative and imperfect conception as to what the ultimate effect will be. But in future ages any one in a thousand, who will see it put together, cleared of the earthy impurities of the mould, and mounted on the pedestal, will be far better able to appreciate its wonderful merit than the most learned in art during its first day and generation.

Such is precisely the case with the extraordi. nary and apparently anomalous man, now Emperor of the French He is not even out of the mould, and this is all the better for those who love to see great names added to history; for, with men like him and his uncle. Nature follows the assertion of Ariosto "lo fece b poi ruppu la stampa"-"made him and then broke the mould." A great character never appears in a second

No intelligent person, who has read the collected writings of Louis Napoleon, has ever risen from their perusal without the conviction that his is a vast mind, refined by elaborate study and more elaborate thought, accustomed to deep and extended views. A single article of his—that on the sugar question—shows deep study of political p cal economy, and to say this is, in the present century, to extend high praise to a politician .-His whole early life shows an excuest devotion to one resolve: to attain his present position, and the leading characteristic which this has developed, has been a miraculous reserve or prudence, which induces silence and singular selfreliance. A thorough knowledge of self, a sin. gular degree of familiarity with his own mental resources and deficiencies, and the never applying for aid until his resources are exhaustedsuch are the principal characteristics of the Emi-

It is remarkable that, while pronounced by most competent authority to be perhaps the greatest politician that ever fived, Louis Napo, leon is a very poor manager for the interior business-the financial-the offaires de menage, or domestic matters. This appears from the men who surround him. He has a parcel of noodles about him as ministers who are perfectly incompetent for their several departments. First. there was the raw, coarse soldier Espinasse as Minister of the Interior; one who spoke to all as though he were drilling raw recruits-and he offended every one. Now he has got an honest man and respectable lawyer, but one who knows no more of what is required for his post than a boy. Fould is so generally hated, and carries unacrunulous selfishness to such an extent, as to her unacrupulous sellsences to such an extent, as to best literary papers of the day—an Imperial Quarto, containing have acquired an unpopularity detrimental to any sight pages, or forty columns, of the most interesting and fact nature seeding matter, from the pean of the very first writers of the columns of man in any calling, and any cause to which he may belong.

When Fould stepped in, he brought in his own

d stepped in, he brought in his own persons of the other Ministers, and may possibly recall the meas they what with railway "concessions, Abbitier and other speculations—plans f the genius of Fould, who wished to seph to an imperial Pharaoh. Here it Louis Napoleon made mistakes, and he since been husy with botching, mendifier the consequences. This has identified the consequences with the fould has not neglected to fall his own pock.

But in comprehending foreign relations and a best method of advancing French interests at of the country, the Emperor is superior to his anche. He has for years trained himself to sonstantly know all that is passing in the world.—In this particular he is not surpassed by any editor in Europe. His personal experience of England, Germany, and especially of the United States, was large, and he preserves his knowledge by constant reading of newspapers. He has made in domestic finance; but he has the lates and the complete of a finished state of the commentation of a finished state, was large, and he preserves his knowledge by constant reading of newspapers. behaves uncommonly well under many trying circumstances. She is beautiful, young and light hearted, though not one of the bitterly "clever ones" spoken of in Dombey, and the closest scrutiny of the most practised familiar with court life hears witness that she fills a very difficult Lyon's Katharion, &c., &c. life bears witness that she fills a very difficult place with decorum and propriety.

What is the future of her husband? The world sees two great dominant imperial minds slowly rising before it-two minds which bid fair to equal any which the world has ever seen-Napoleon of France, and Alexander of Russia .--Alexander derives his views and guides his political economy by those of that extraordinary and mysterious genius, "Iskander," or Alexander Hersen; Louis Napolcon goes single handed der Hersen; Louis Napoleon goes single handed to all his work. What, if they be spared to live, will the two have effected twenty years hence?
