What are cigars made of?—The New York correspondent of the Boston Herald, domiciled in the neighborhood of the Custom House, gives the following explanation of the component materials of these "real Havanas." We copy it for the benefit of those who, in supposing they smoke the fragrant weed, do not know the truth which hangs over not only what we drink, but also what we smoke.

"Thinking of cigars, I was told by a government appraiser, a few days since, the following true story in connection with the ever-trade of the city. A large German importing House had received an invoice of foreign cigars, which were approved by the Custom Officers at three dollars a pound. The importers were dissatisfied, and a few days afterwards, which was granted, and a certificate of positive evidence, supported by the seal of the collector, the cigars were admitted at a valuation of 50 cents per thousand. Now the evidence alluded to was this—that not a particle of tobacco entered into the composition of such cigars, but that they were wholly composed of oak and other leaves soaked in a strong tobacco juice. I understand that large quantities of these "real Havanas" find their way into the interior, and from some experience I have had in that line, I am inclined to believe that a few specimens might be found even among the primitive society of "Old Seaboard."
