gushed forth as an adicu to the land they had loved.

Soon after sunset, I persuaded my little trends to let me lead them to the cabin, and then returned to look out again apon the ocean. In about half an hour, as I was standing musingly apart, I felt my hand gently pressed, and on turning round saw that the little girl had stolen alone to my side. In a few moments the evening star began to twinkle from the edging of a violet cloud. At first it gleamed faintly, and at intervals, but anon it came brightly out, and shone like a hoty thing upon the brow of evening. The girl at my side gazed upon it, and haifed it with a tone which told that a thought of rapture was at her heart. She inquired, with simplicity and cageness, whether in the fair land to which we were going that same brightstar would be visible, and seemed to regardit as another friend that was to be with her in her long and lonely journey.
