

in the four senators, unless it were a desire to emulate their firmness, and consistency. But be that as it may, four of our Senators did say white was black, and the next day said black was white. We rejoice however that they have done something which has terminated the riot and excitement. Had they have recognised the Hopkins' House at once, we should never have complained, we should have thought they were frightened into it, we don't think so now. Other causes have operated, we hope they were not corrupt. We shall wait patiently to see their reasons; and let us see if they can give any which did not have the same weight when they voted on the direct opposite side, and if they cannot, upon them let us hang the disgrace of having been woefully guilty in opposing the patriotic people who commenced the mob, or else of having been touched with the magic wand gold. These are two very troublesome horns, but upon one of them they must hang, unless they give sound reasons for their conduct.

We have considerable charity, and are willing to give them good motives, until we know better. We cannot say with our friend of the 'Chronicle' that it is fear, that we consider almost as bad as to say they were bought. The poor patron, who would desert his post while guarding one of the citadels of Freedom, is bought at the contemptible price of his paltry life, if he thought it in danger. It is the vilest corruption. We will not admit it was fear; and should they say it was fear, they should have a monument dedicated to eternal infamy erected to commemorate the deed. We trust they can find some honorable excuse for their course, and until we hear more we shall not censure them.

The people owe much to Messrs. Penrose, Barclay, Pearson, and in fact to the entire sixteen who stood by their glorious ensign until delivered by their own friends into the hands of their foes.

The Meeting.

Our readers will find on the first page the proceedings of a meeting held on Christmas day, by the citizens of our Borough. We commend them to their attentive perusal. They speak not in the language of excitement, but in the dignified tone of freeman, their love of right, and respect for the existing laws, and their detestation of a government of force.

We rejoice to find that our friends do not wish to show themselves favorable to any of the mad and visionary schemes which has disgraced the capitol of the State; and throw our good State of Pennsylvania into an unenviable, and disreputable comparison with the other States. It will take years for Pennsylvania to regain her former standing in the Union. Who excited, or who caused the result will not alter the fact. The injury has been done and how the stain came on her escutcheon, it matters not, it will remain there to dim its brightness for many a day.

We now earnestly hope that every friend of his country will, raise his voice against all and every encroachment upon the laws, and let Pennsylvania regain her wonted eminence, and let the people, who neither have nor desire office, examine with an unprejudiced eye the whole scene, let them learn who were the guilty incendiaries, and let them consign them to lasting disgrace. Let the bolt fall on whom it may—let it come. By so doing, the effect of the present evil, may in some measure be ameliorated, and all such disaster, in futur: avoided.

Mr. Printer:

You know those who subscribe for a paper, whether they pay or not, like to get the worth of the money. Some, to make sure work, read weekly the motto-advertisements and all; apparently with the same degree of feeling and interest, unless a case of murder or rape occurs, which produces a momentary excitement. This course in reading a Newspaper cannot reasonably be objected to, if the reader, in company, "reads in to himself." But we are sometimes annoyed by a "squire," or old gentleman, not fully acquainted with the proprieties of social intercourse, who undertakes to retail news, a week, month, or year old. To correct this bad habit of "showing forth," (if admonition has failed to effect the object) I take leave to give you an account of a "holding forth" at which the writer was present.

The squire "held forth" lustily, and in the course of his reading pronounced in good loud stile the following important document. For the original you will please look into the Philadelphia papers. "SANDS' remedy for SALT RHEUM, RINGWORM, TITTER, BARBER'S or JACKSON'S ITCH, which has been tested in rising three thousand cases without in one instance having failed"—stop 'there, said J—G—one of the bystanders, I don't understand all them there complaints.—O, said a wag in company, I and explain the whole. "Salt rheum" means being "rowed up salt river" at an Election—"Ringworm" is a direct route for a rail road, such as the one from Philadelphia to Pittsburg by the way of Gettysburg and Hagerstown—Titter is the habit of some young gentlemen and ladies, "to laugh in a corner," when their conversational powers forbid their uniting in the general interchange of words and opinions—JACKSON ITCH, as every body knows is ITCH for ITCH! "Well I declare," said friend Joshua "that is the most grandest remedy that ever I heard on, but I doubt about its curing on the Jackson itch." The reader was cured of his itch for holding forth, by a loud laugh.
