and the undying tenacity with which she will cling to the partner of her joys and her sorrows. Are there any who deem the picture overwrought, compare the situation of him who is left alone to stand the blasts of adversity. Like the solitary oak, his stubborn and unyielding temper may mock the storm for a while, but death and decay will mark him for a victim, and he tumbles to the earth neglected and forgotten. Compare such a one, we say, with him whose returning steps are greeted on the picture of the partner of her joys and and origin of many words and quotations of the term Shinplastern—It way be often remarked that the derivation of the partner ship heretofore existing between Joseph, and the picture overwrought, compare the sitte picture overwrought, compare such a one, we say, with him whose returning steps are greeted with a wife's fond smile, whose bed of pain is made of ease by that guardian angel of sickness, an ever watching wife, as she bathes his burning forehead and profers the only cup of joy disease can know, to his lip. Hand in hand will she go cheerfully, almost joyfully, down the rough declivity between affluence and want; care and toil, her every sigh breaths "thy home and toil, her every sigh breaths "thy home is my home, thy God is my God." With is my home, thy God is my God." With what meekness and apparent content will she enter the lowliest hovel, so that the scanty pittance is divided with him there. Give to the wife the pure undivided affection and love of her companion, and no hand, save the ruthless one of the grim hand, save the ruthless one of the grim late. hand, save the ruthless one of the grim monarch of the grave, can sever her from him. Even then, as the damp earth fell upon his coffin, have we seen the mourner, terror stricken, thoughtless of the pastregardless alike of the future (to her an endless abyss of sorrow) with an eye expressive of the narrow thread which connects reason with madness—life, death, eternal joy, or misery, all, all for-gotten, swallowed up and lost in the inten gotten, swallowed up and lost in the inten sity of her feeling for the object of her

The mother! What on earth can equal the fond caress, the anxious solicitude and untiring kindness of a mother's heart. A mothers affection will seek, with the same zeal her offspring, amid desolation, poverty and crime, that it will in the halls of luxury, or the pallaces of princes, or power; and should the world scoff at his sins and shame, and shun him as though his prosence were pollution, her love for him was cradled in her heart, and shes doves and loves forever," her prayers, her tears, and her smiles are all used to win him back; and until mingled with her mother earth, she labours with the same zeal, the same love, and the same hope. Her kindness only slumbers in the tomb.

In every walk of life woman is the same. Formed for affection, she knows no other enjoyment. Unyielding as the rock, yet gentle as the wild flower which clings and blossoms at its base. She casts her arms around the anchor of her support, and with equal fidelity and love will she live throughout the most heartrending scenes and storms of adversity, that she will through the more gay though more deceptive smiles of prosperity. He is less than man, and more than demon who wilfully casts one shadow on her brow.

A Beautiful Sentiment.

The late eminent judge Sir Allen Park once said at a public meeting in the city. We live in the midst of blessings, till we are utterly insensible of their greatness, and of the source from whence they flow. We speak of our civilization, our art, our freedoms; our laws, and forget entirely how large a share of all is due to Christianity.—Blot christianity out of the page of man's history, and what would his laws have been—what his civilization?—Christianity is mixed up with our very being and our daily life; there is not a familiar bleet around us which does not wenark, not a being or thing which care a different aspect.

Christian happenhich does wanted been—what his civilization?—Christianity is mixed up with our very being and our daily life; there is not a familiar object around us which does not wear a different aspect, because the light of Christian hopes are on it, not a length of Christian hopes are on it, not a length of Christian hopes are on it, not a length of Christianity, not a custom which does not wears to Christianity, not a custom which cannot be traced in all its holy and healthy parts to the Gospel."
