tion. I affirm without fear of contradiction, that many of those persons, which colorumstance may have made guilty, were capable of easy reformation; and I doubt not there are others which have been sayed from perhaps disgraceful death, by moral education.

My object when I came to this place was, to examine the head of Robert Mc Conaghy. I came out of my course, a hundred miles or more, for this express purpose. It is important that the Phrenhologist, if he hopes to perfect the science, should be convinced that certain formations, in like situations of life, produce like lives, sometimes like fates.

I have spent some hours in the company of the prisoner. He has temptations, which no others possess. There is not, I am satisfied, an individual in this house, that measures like him through the region of acquisitiveness. I am satisfied he is uneducated. Five dollars would temptation in the way of a mind thus constructed, would be equally as guilty as the thief. He cannot resist temptat on. Folim to be tempted, is for him to fall, unless Philanthropy had taken him by the hand, and led him in the pleasant paths of moral education. It is the Philanthropist alone who can educate minds thus constructed. Had he been thus educated, he might to-day have been happy around the fire sade circle of his mountain home, instead of the miserable conviction the dangeon cell, with but a few days between time and eternity. Is he not unfortunate? Here let me digress a moment, to show a case which occurred under my own observation. I once saved a man, in Boston, from the gallows. He had killed a man, who came up behind him, ke turned suddenly round, and with his axe, split his head. I called on him in his cell, and for the purpose of examination, asked to go behind him. With the wildness of the maniac, he would not provide the circumstance of a special provide the companion, and assign the circumstance of the confidence of the confidence of the confidence of the circumstance of the confidence of the circumstance of the confidence of his axe, split his head. I called on him in his cell, and for the purpose of examination, asked to go behind him. With the wildness of the maniac, he would not permit it. He was, I saw at once, insone on that subject—an uncontrolable fear that any one behind him would kill him. I satisfied the Judge, the Jury, and the people, that I was right; and he closed his said career in the Lunatic Assylum. It is not so with McConughy—his intellect

I should like to examine his brothers; if they are constructed like him, they are subjects for the Philanthropist. If the principles of Phrenology be true, as I assert they are, to what immense advantage to mankind will the universal knowledge of, or belief in, the science be. The parent can observe and direct the character of the child, and mould its mind by moral education, and thus create a greater safeguard from crime, than any punishment can be. Where one faculty is large, another small to a fault, cultivate the latter, and resist the former. Phrenology teaches us, when such is the case, and I wish to prove the science, that parents may derive advantage therefrom."

On the next evening, we listened to his ould like to examine his brothers;

On the next evening, we listened to his lecture on the subject of "matrimonial alliances? - and have only time and room to say, that it was a chaste, and beautiful moral lesson, to every mother and daugh-ter, or father and son.
