An Incident of the Revolution.

BY SYD. A. ANDREWS.

The morning dawned upon the sensations and events of the 3rd of October, 1770. It was a day of marked destiny in the history of those who were then engaged in opposing the measures of the British Government. The day was marked by the arrest of some of those who were the leaders of the revolutionary movement. The day was marked by the destruction of some of the property of the British Government. The day was marked by the occurrence of a number of events which contributed to the success of the revolutionary movement.

The weather was calm and the air was clear. The sun shone brightly in the sky. The birds were singing. The trees were waving in the breeze. The day was perfect.

The men who were arrested were taken to the county jail. The property which was destroyed was taken to the market and sold. The events of the day contributed to the success of the revolutionary movement.

The day was a day of triumph. The day was a day of victory. The day was a day of peace. The day was a day of prosperity.

The men who were arrested were tried and found guilty. They were sentenced to hard labor in the mines. The property which was destroyed was seized by the government.

The day was a day of sorrow. The day was a day of pain. The day was a day of suffering. The day was a day of death.

The men who were arrested were executed. The property which was destroyed was burned.

The day was a day of tragedy. The day was a day of horror. The day was a day of terror. The day was a day of death.
