A Sad Story.

The dwelling house and barn of Mr. Seymour F. Benedict, at Walton, Delaware county, N. Y., was destroyed by fire on Saturday night the 7th instant, and dreadful to relate, his wife and five children perished in the flames. As near as can be ascertained, the fire was communicated from a candle that the children took on going to bed, up stairs. Mr. Benedict and his wife were first awakened by the fire breaking through from the chamber into the room where he and his wife and their youngest child slept. They immediately rushed out of the house, carrying the child with them. The children up stairs were crying for help, surrounded by the flames, and Mr. Benedict urged them to jump from the window—that he would catch them. The eldest did so, being then already much burned, but the others did not, either through fear or inability. Meanwhile, it is supposed that Mrs. B. had gone into the house with the vain endeavour to get them out; and the little child, about four years old, unconscious of danger, followed her; and all perished.

A Child Killed by Bears.

A few days since a child was killed in the northern part of Decatur, Co. Ia., about sixty miles North west of Cincinnati.—The Bulletin says:—"The child was some distance from the house gathering nuts when the bears attacked and killed it. Shortly after this fate they met a man in the woods and chased him home, pursuing him to his very door, when he took down his gun and shot one of them within a few steps of his door, and with some of his neighbors, succeeded shortly after in killing the other. This happened in the most populous part of the country.—We did not learn the particulars nor the names of the persons who were concerned, but we have it from a good source."

Dreadful Doings in Ohio.

An affray took place at Georgetown, (O.) on Monday (the 9th inst.) between some Kentucky negro hunters and a number of abolitionists. Some runaway negroes, belonging to Col. Edward Towers, of Mason county, (Ky.) were concealed in the houses of Robert Miller, and Absalom King, and Miller's house being searched, two of the runaways were discovered in it. Miller, while aiding them to escape, was knocked down, and so dreadfully stabbed that he survived but a few minutes. The captors then proceeded, with the two slaves bound, toward King's house, but were met on the road by four or five men, who resisted the proposed endeavor to search King's dwelling. Both parties were well armed, and a conflict ensued, in which Col. Tower's son was shot dead, and King so badly wounded that he can hardly survive.—The Sheriff and his posse at this period stopped the riot, arrested the insurgents, and conveyed them to Georgetown.—Shortly afterward an additional number of Kentuckians arrived and they immediately hung one of the slaves for resisting a brother of Col. Towers, who had captured him, burned Miller's and King's houses to the ground, and beat a Mr. Alexander Gilliland till his life was despaired of. The Georgetown Telegraph, from an extra of which the above is gleaned, adds:—"The number of the Kentuckians is increasing hourly, and the whole neighborhood is up in arms. The Sheriff is actively engaged in attempting to quell the riot."

Report of Secretary of War.

We have received the report of the Secretary of War, which occupies six closely printed columns of the Washington Globe. The following is a synopsis of the report from the War Department. The Secretary leads off with an eulogy on the arrangement of the different bureaus under his department, comprehending the "military establishment," "pensions and bounties for military services," "improvements of rivers and harbors," of "mineral lands and all Indian affairs." He notes the fact that the present military organization of the United States is "for times of peace," but still with a view to the purpose of preserving among us as a people, all that military knowledge, without which a nation is never prepared to assert her own dignity, nor ever defend her soil from invasion." He thinks that if any untoward circumstance should drive us to the necessity of war, our health, population and skill in the mechanic arts, would enable us to cope with any nation. The re-mounting of the second Regiment of Dragoons is recommended as the very best force for military service in the prairies. He notes the real termination of the Florida war, and the restoration of confidence in that Territory. He recommends central barracks in healthy sites on the seaboard, and not the least politic of his recommendations, is the one that buildings for religious worship and schools be erected as attachments to all our public fortifications. He recommends an addition to the "horse or light field artillery force," and notes the fact that "superiority in the horse artillery force in the French revolutionary war, generally secured the victory."

He expresses a high opinion of the West Point Academy—says the appointments of the cadets are impartially made, and regrets that a portion of the people attach to it what he apprehends to be "a mistaken and groundless charge of aristocratic tendency." The Secretary evidently fears that public opinion is settling against the Academy; and in his closing remarks, he asks that a committee of Congress may be appointed to visit the Institution, and report such amendments or reform its management as may be deemed necessary.

The Secretary thinks that with a military establishment like ours, it should be the policy of the Government to encourage the resignation of officers after twenty-five years service, and recommends as an inducement, that Congress pass a law "entitling an officer after twenty-five years of good and faithful service, to a section of public land, and two years furlough on full pay, with the condition, should he avail himself of this privilege, that his commission be vacated at the termination of his furlough."

The Secretary recommends the erection of permanent fortifications on several parts of the seaboard. He urges the policy of a system of defence by permanent fortifications.

A national foundry, with all the means of trying and testing iron ores coming from different parts of the country—also for making model guns, and securing the safety of cannon, is appropriately spoken of as necessary. The Secretary gives well digested and cogent reasons on the necessity and utility of such an establishment.

The Secretary says that he has no doubt of our legitimate claim to the territory west of the Rocky Mountains, and hints the necessity of an organization of some manner of government over the American citizens that are every day settling it.

He recommends an appropriation of $100,000 for erecting the military posts from the Missouri river to the Rocky Mountains.

Report of Secretary of Navy.

From the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy, we condense the most important portion thereof:—"The Navy of the United States at the present time consists of six ships of the line, one raze, fourteen frigates, twenty one sloops of war, sixteen brigs and schooners, three store ships and eighteen steamers afloat.

There are on the stocks, in an unfinished state four ships of the line, three frigates, one store ship, an iron steamer at Pittsburg, and one at the Navy Yard at Washington to be used as a water tank. Since the last annual report, after careful survey and inspection, it was found most conducive to the public interest to sell the frigate Hudson, and the store ships Consort and Chipola, and orders have been recently given for the sale of the Pioneer. In each case the Navy Agent conducting the sale, was limited as to the price, and the sales are satisfactory. The Hudson was originally built by contract for a foreign government, was found to be unworthy of repair, and it was believed to be more advantageous to sell than to break her up.

The force estimated for and proposed to be employed during the year, commencing on the 1st day of July, 1845, consists of 10 frigates, 13 sloops of war, 7 brigs, 2 schooners, 4 armed steamers, 4 store ships and 2 small vessels. It is not so large as that estimated for in the last annual report—but it is somewhat larger than that first authorized by the appropriations for the current fiscal year.

The Secretary states that he has complied with the law of June 1844, by which it is provided that the whole number of petty officers, seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen and boys in the Naval service during the current fiscal year shall not exceed at any one time, seven thousand five hundred men. Acting under this law he says that the department promptly gave orders to suspend the enlistment of men, and to discharge the crews of the vessels as they reach our own waters, until the required reduction was effected.
