

Ploughing for Wheat.

But few farmers are willing to undertake the purchase and use of the subsoil plow, but all may adopt the practice of deep plowing by the ordinary method. In many parts of the country, the soil may be much improved in its wheat-raising qualities, by throwing up and mixing with the surface, a small portion of the subsoil. In some instances this has been attended with strikingly successful effects. In others, where the subsoil has been thrown on the surface, the increase in the growth of wheat has been almost incredible. A neighbor scattered the earth taken from a ditch over the surface for many feet on each side. Afterwards when the crop of wheat averaged on the rest of the field scarcely five bushels per acre, the portion which had been thus covered with subsoil, yielded from twenty to twenty-five bushels per acre. In this case the soil was light, and the subsoil somewhat clayey, and contained a small portion of carbonate of lime, effervescing slightly in acid; the operation rendered the soil stronger, firmer, and better adapted to the growth of wheat. Doubtless large portions of our country might be thus greatly, and perhaps permanently improved, by the use of such manure, thus lying in immense quantities just beneath the surface. But there may be other subsoils not only useless, but actually detrimental; hence the necessity of discrimination and care.

Potato Blight.

It grieves us to state that the blight which caused such destruction to the potato crop last year, has, thus early, commenced its ravages, the present season. We have examined a field belonging to Gov. Lincoln, which we are assured, exhibited a perfectly healthy appearance on the 3d instant. On the 8th portion of the vines showed indications of the disease, and on the 7th about one half more or less shrivelled, many of them shrivelled to one half of their former dimensions, and some of the leaves already turned brown and nearly dry. The potatoes were of the red variety, sometimes called the peach-blow. We opened one of the hills most affected with the disease, and found the seed still sound and apparently healthy. Some of the new set potatoes were about the size of a robin's egg, and looked well. So far as we observed, the disease appears to commence at the upper part of the vine.

We invite the particular attention of farmers to this subject. We hope that such careful and accurate observations of the commencement and progress of the disease, the present season, may be made and recorded, by men of judgment, as will lead to some more conclusive indications than have been heretofore obtained, of its origin and cause, and that they may result in the discovery of some efficient and adequate remedy for the appalling evil—an evil that threatens the destruction of a crop which affords one of our most wholesome articles of food.

Worcester Spy.

THE CHURCH BELLS.—The following is from an article in Jerrold's Magazine, entitled, "St. Giles and St. James," and is truly admirable. It cannot be read without emotion:

"There's something beautiful in the church bells. Beautiful and hopeful!—they talk to high and low, rich and poor, in the same voice; there's a sound in 'em that should scare pride, and envy, and meanness of all sorts from the heart of man; that should make him look upon the world with kind, forgiving eyes; that should make the earth itself seem to him, at least for a time, a holy place. Yes: there's a whole sermon in the very sound of the Church bells, if we have only the ears to rightly understand it. There's a preacher in every bell that cries, 'Poor, weary, struggling creatures—poor human things! take rest; be quiet. Forget your vanities, your follies, your week-day craft, your heart-burnings! And you, ye human vessels, gilt and painted; believe the iron tongue that tells ye, that for all your gilding, all your colors, ye are of the same Adam's earth with the beggar at your gates. Come away, come, cries the church bell, and learn to be humble; learning that, however daubed and stained, and stuck about with jewels, you are but grave clay! Come, Dives, come; and be taught that all your glory, as you wear it, is not half so beautiful in the eye of heaven, as the sores of uncomplaining Lazarus! And ye, poor creature, livid and faint—stinted and crushed by the pride and hardness of the world—come, come, cries the bell, with the voice of an angel—come and learn what is laid up for ye. And learning, take heart and walk among the wickedness, the cruelties of the world, calmly as Daniel walked among the lions."

Irish Wit.

We have seldom seen, says the Boston Journal, a more striking illustration of Irish wit and repartee, combined with the most scorching sarcasm, which is characteristic of that people, than is furnished by the following anecdote, which we lately met with in the course of our reading, and which may be new to some of our readers:

Hely Hutchinson, late Prevost of Trinity College, on his first introduction into the Irish Parliament, delivered a speech of considerable length on the "rapid increase of the prosperity of Ireland." Counsellor Costello, a member of the same Parliament, listened with great attention to the young orator's flowery declamation, and when he had done, the counsellor got up and expressed the satisfaction he felt on hearing that this, his native country, was in such a flourishing state.—"When," added he, "that youthful senator got up to speak I had three halfpence in my pocket, and I am sure they must be three guineas now!—Let me see." On which he put his hand into his pocket, pulled them out, and having looked at them for a moment, exclaimed—"Oh, by my soul, they are halpence still!"
