

A white woman among the Winnebago Indians.

There is now among the Winnebagoes, near Fort Atkinson, a white woman, supposed to be about seventy years old, who knows nothing of her parents, and who has conformed to all the manners and habits of the Indians. She was recognized by John Haney, Esq., now living at Prairie du Chien, and who also thought he saw in her wrinkled and care worn countenance the kindred lineaments of an old friend—Philip Dalbridge. In answer to an inquiry, Mr. H. writes as follows:

Philip Dalbridge is the name of the man who lost the three children—one of which I suppose to be the old white woman now with the Winnebagoes. From my recollections of the features of Mr. D., and the striking resemblance of this woman, I have little doubt of her being one of his children. Her apparent age, and the fact of her having no recollection of her captivity, answer the case of his children, who were taken away when very young. They were captured on the waters of the Monongahela river, in Virginia, near sixty years ago. Mr. D. lived in Washington county, Pennsylvania, for a number of years; he then emigrated to the State of Indiana, some thirty years ago, where he died. His children, I suppose, are, some of them, still living in the State of Indiana. Mr. Dalbridge was an intimate friend of my father, and being a man of marked features, I still retain a distinct recollection of his family.—The first time I saw this woman I was struck with her resemblance to the Dalbridge family. I had intended to have written to some of the family, but have neglected it.

The outline of the history of the capture above mentioned, is something as follows, if our recollection of the story is not at fault: Dalbridge was returning to his home, from a short absence, but just in season to see his dwelling in flames, and his wife and children in the act of being hurried off by the hostile Indians. He was almost upon them before he was aware of his danger, and his wife motioned him to flee for his life. He had entered the little field that surrounded his dwelling, and a high fence interposed between him and the forest. Several Indians sprang towards him to secure him, but being a very athletic man, he leaped the fence like a deer and outstripped his pursuers. But he was ever after a lonely and disconsolate man, and spent much of his after life in endeavors to regain his lost family. For this purpose he visited after the peace, most of the Indian-tribes in the Mississippi valley, also Canada, and to ascertain the truth of such report, in fruitless hope, he visited Scotland. Dalbridge recovered some portion of his family, and we have reason to believe, ascertained where others died, but of one or two of his children, he never had any tidings. It is highly probable that the personage above referred to as being with the Winnebago Indians was one of them. Our kind-hearted friend, Mr. H., conversed with her of her situation, and tried to wean her from her present mode of life. At first a different ambition seemed to lighten up her eye, and she would often visit his family clad in a cleaner blanket and with more gaudy ornaments than was her wont before; but she informed him finally, that she knew of no other kindred or people by the ties of attachment except those with whom she had always associated, and she wished to lie down with them in her final rest. She is remarkable among the Indians for her temperance and for her disregard of many of their superstitious rites.

TO SENSIBLE CITIZENS.—We know from what we see and feel, that the animal body is, in its organs and functions, subject to derangement, inducing pain, and leading to its destruction. In this disordered state, we observe nature providing for the re-establishment of order, by exciting some salutary evacuation of the morbid matter, or by some other operation, which escapes our imperfect senses and researches. In some cases she brings on a crisis by the bowels, in others by sweating, &c. &c.

Now experience has taught us, that there are certain substances, by which, applied to the living body, internally or externally, we can at will produce the same evacuations; and thus do but slowly, and do effectually what she might not have strength to accomplish. When then we have seen a disease cured by a certain natural evacuation, should that disease occur again, we may count upon curing it by the use of such substances, as we know bring about the same evacuation, which we had before observed to cure a similar disease. It is in consequence of the power which the Brandreth Pills exert upon the whole system, that makes them so universally beneficial. It is because they impart to the body, the power to expel disease without leaving any evil effect.

As a general family medicine, Brandreth's Pills are, it is believed by the Proprietor, superior to every other offered to the public. Dr. Brandreth's Pills are for sale by the following Agents in this county:

Wm. Stewart, Huntingdon.
M'Farlane, Garber, & Co., Hollidaysburg.
A. & N. Creswell, Petersburg.
Moore & Swoope, Alexandria.
Hartman & Smith, Manor Hill.
Thomas M. Owen, Birmingham.
A. Patterson, Williamsburg.
