POETRY.

[From the Guide to Holiness]

Madame Guyon was imprisoned about ten years in the Bastille and other French prisons. During this period she employed herself chiefly in writing. Her Life, four volumes of Poems, and other writings, were the result. The following is a translation of one of her Poems. It illustrates her state of mind in her afflictions:

A Little Bird I am.

A little bird I am,
Shut from the fields of air;
And in my cage I sit and sing
To him who placed me there;
Well pleas'd a prisoner to be,
BECAUSE, MY GOD, IT PLEASES THEE.

Nought have I else to do;
I sing the whole day long,
And He, whom most I love to please,
Doth listen to my song;
He caught and bound my wandering wing
But still he bends to hear me sing.

Thou hast an ear to hear;
A heart to love and bless;
And, though my notes were e'er so rude,
Thou wouldst not hear the less;
Because Thou knowest, as they fall,
That love, sweet love, inspires them all.

My cage confines me round;
Abroad I cannot fly;
But, though my wing is closely bound,
My heart's at liberty;
My prison walls cannot control
The flight, the freedom of the soul.

Oh, it is good to soar,
These bolts and bars above,
To Him, whose purpose I adore,
Whose providence I love;
And in Thy mighty will to find
The joy, the freedom of the mind.

Love's Emblems.

Love's meekest emblems are the flowers,
The blushing flowers of Spring—
Then bring me, dear, to charm my hours,
Sweet leaves and blossoms bring.

I ask not gems of costly toys—
Their brightest tints are cold;
And ours are simpler, purer joys
Than can be won by gold.

The gems endure, the roses fade,
Yet something in the heart
Still tells that Love is best portrayed
By Nature—not by Art.

The dew descends, the roses fade,
Yet something in the heart
Still tells that Love is best portrayed
By Nature—not by Art.

Tom Paine the Infidel.

William B. Reed, Esq., recently delivered an eloquent lecture before the Mercantile Library Association of Philadelphia, upon the 'Life and Times' of Tom Paine, the Infidel, of which the Inquirer gives the following interesting sketch:

"Thomas Paine was a citizen of the world, and of course alien to every part of it. Born in Great Britain, he was an exile and an outlaw. Naturalized in America, he renounced her moderate republican form, for the exaggerations of French democracy.—A citizen of France, he became ex-officio an inmate of the Conciergerie; and was glad, not grateful, to escape with a head upon his shoulders. Buried in an American village, the grave was violated, and the bones of the restless cosmopolite were exhumed and carried abroad, in solemn mockery of the relics of holy men of old. Mr. Reed proceeded, without derogating from the actual value of Paine's services during the revolution to define and mark their worth, and to correct the notion which in life he was so anxious to cultivate that he was by common consent regarded as a great benefactor to America. Thomas Paine, the child of humble though reputable parents, was born at Thetford, in the county of Norfolk, England, in 1737. His father was a member of the Society of Friends, and his mother was an Episcopalian. According to his own story, Paine was an infidel in the nursery. Mr. Reed alluded to this statement of the deceased, as given in his 'Age of Reason,' and commented upon it in a truly beautiful strain. The old man of sixty, he said (for such he was when these sad words were written) travelling back in memory to the hours of infancy, and persuading himself at the age of seven years that he was a reasoning infidel. The boy standing upon the garden steps, with the flowers and singing birds around him; with the sound of familiar prayer in his ears, seriously reflecting on thoughts of blasphemy. And fifty years afterwards, the childless, friendless man, who never knew the softening influence of domestic relations amid scenes of blood and carnage, at which even his heart, bold as it was, would sicken—for he wrote his Age of Reason in the midst of the Reign of Terror—boastfully recorded his persevering obstinate scepticism of all in God's written word, which could not be compassed either by his childish or his matured intelligence.

On the fall of Robespierre, when the prisons were opened, Paine, with a few other survivors, worn out with distress of mind and disease of body, was set at liberty. Soon after he published the second part of his Age of Reason, the blasphemies of which, said Mr. Reed, are enough to sicken the heart.—Subsequently, in 1802, Paine returned to the U. States. He at last took refuge on his farm near New Rochelle, where he lingered in obscurity until his death, in 1809, at the age of seventy-two.

Alluding to his death-bed scene, Mr. Reed closed his lecture in the most impressive manner. Paine dreading being left alone, or being left in darkness, and screamed like a terrified child for his nurse and the light. He insisted on his nurse reading aloud; but what she read was not in order to take solace from what she read as to be satisfied by the sound of her voice, that she was at hand. About ten years after Paine's death, Cobbett made a pilgrimage to New Rochelle, disinterred the mouldering bones, and removed them to Great Britain. It was, said Mr. R. a piece of indecent and ineffectual mockery. The bones of the scoffer were looked on by such of the British people as knew anything about them, with no more regard than the anatomical student bestowed on the unknown carcase before him. And thus ending the story of one who was endowed with abilities that might have made an impression on the world, and have left a memorable trace behind them—an actor in scenes of commanding interest—a patriot in a certain though a narrow sense—but without infirm in the only high purpose which consecrated man's career on earth, and poor in the aspiration which alone dignified humanity—the aspiration for a reward which the "world neither gives nor takes away"—the mingling of the highest human qualities—the love of virtue and of truth, with a meek and humble sense of the power with which God had endowed us, and the love of freedom, with a decent reverence for authority and example, which constitute the perfection of human character—that of the conservative and Christian patriot.

When General Burgoyne was once at a play, which was most indifferently performed, he called one of the actors and asked him the name of the piece. "The Stage Coach, sir," replied Buskin.—"The next time you play it," said the General, "I must ask to be an outside passenger."

Nor Poor.—The Boston Mail speaks of two young men in Maine, whose names are Rich, marrying two sisters named Wing, and then moving off to Illinois. This verifies the old proverb, that "Riches take to themselves Wings and fly away."

"Why is the Ohio River like an unfortunate drunkard?" "Because it takes so much 'Monongahela' that passes along 'Wheeling' receives 'Licking' at Cincinnati, and 'Falls' at Louisville."—N. Y. Mirror.

CAVES.—"You are from the country, are you not, sir?" said a dandy clerk in a book store, to a handsomely dressed quaker who had given him some trouble.

"Yes."

"Well, here's an Essay on the Rearing of Calves."

"That," said Aminadab, as he turned to leave the store, "had better present to thy mother."

SEARCH.—Unbustled ladies, pure and undefiled Christians, disinterested friends, common honesty, sound potatoes, first rate butter, and rich Printers.

PRESENT.—Old maids and dried apples.
