CONGRESS.
Exciting Scene in the House.
Washington, April 27, 1846.

After the transaction of some unimportant b ness, C. J. Ingersoll rose and made the follow charges against Mr. Webster:

narges against Mr. Webster:
Firt. Unlawful use of the fund appropriated for e contingent service of foreign intercourse, com-ionly called the secret service fund.

nd. Misapplying part of that fund to corrup

arty presses.

Thirdly. Leaving the Department of State in fault to that fund.

Mr. I. went on at some length in support of the harges he had made, stating that they were all suspeptible of proof.

Mr. Ashmun of Massachusetts, in the course of interests seit or the second of the state of the second of the sec ceptible of proof.

Mr. Ashmun of Massachusetts, in the course of his reply, said:

What are the charges? Charges of peculation—charges upon Mr. Webster of the personal use of this fund. Now, no proof has been produced to sustain the truth of this charge. It has not been sustained by one particle of evidence that the gentleman has undertaken to state to the House, that that secret service fund was taken possession of by Mr. Webster. The House knows that it is utterly impossible; that it cannot be true; that that fund is under the direction and control of the President, and can only be obtained on the certificate of the President; and when I saw the little by-play by which the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Bayly) called upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania to exempt Mr. Tyler from any connexion with this transaction, I understood it perfectly well, and I know equally well that Mr. Tyler has said, and now says, that not one dollar was expended but under says, that not one dollar was expended but under his direction. And I know further, that the insidi-ous efforts that have been resorted to to get Mr. Tyler to take ground on this subject against Mr.

Mr. Ingersoll. By me?
Mr. Ashmun not returning an immediate ans Mr. Ingersoll repeated the question: By me?

Mr. Ashmun. Yes.
Mr. Ingersoll. It is utterly false.

The Speaker rapped to order. Mr. Ingersoll, (still standing and conti e.) It is a lie; the lie of a coward. Ashmun, (resuming.) Yes, the aged gen-from Pennsylvania—

Mr. Ingersoll, (interposing.) I am quite young

Mr. Ashmun. Yes; the aged gentleman from remaylvania comes here to use language towards to which he supposes can provoke a personal con-ict. I com from a section of country where they cither believe in duelling, bewie knives, or pistols. We are neither afraid of them nor do we use them. Mr. C. J. Ingersoll, (in his seat.) Nor of getting Irunk.

Mr. Ashmun, (continuing.) The member from connsylvania supposed by using that phrase he could disturb by equanimity. If he choose to try thether I am afraid, let him try and he will find whether I am afraid, let him try and he will find out.

I stated that insidious efforts had been made to induce Mr. Tyler to take ground on this subject against Mr. Webster. I believe when the gontleman first found he was to be disappointed in the proof, that efforts were made by him, or at least with his connivance, for this purpose. And it has been stated in the public papers that certain gentlemen were requested to do so. I will not youch for all that is said in the papers; but when I have seen the means resorted to—that the secret archives of the government have been broken into for the obtaining the means of detraction, I am not at liberty to state all I know in relation to other efforts.

I come back, Mr. Speaker, to the charge that Mr. Webster has used the public funds. The gentleman seys $17,000. Where is the proof? It rests entirely upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He says he has obtained it; and in so saying he admits his own shame; that he has been where he has no right to be. He professed to read what he called a letter. How much of that was his own comments, and how much the true letter we do not know. It purports to be for the corruption of the press. Well. I beg the gentleman to answer comments, and now much the true letter we do not know. It purports to be for the corruption of the press. Well. I beg the gentleman to answer how much money it will take to buy up the democratic press in Maine. Even if a thousand or two dollars had been used by Mr. Tyler and Mr. Webster for the purpose of circulating information among the people of Maine so as to bring them to agree upon a conventional boundary, of the just of which they were satisfied, Mr. A. considere of which they were satisfied, Mr. A. Considered it no worse than the giving the public printing to edi-tors of the political press. But was this corrupting the public press? It is all idle, said he. There is not the slightest evidence of it except the mere statement of the member from Pennsylvania. How much that is worth I leave the House to decide.

statement of the member from Pennsylvania. How much that is worth I leave the House to decide.

Mr. A. charged Mr. I. with being both accuser and witness. He had brought from the State Department an account of certain documents, which he said existed there, and which the House was to believe on his veracity. This was all the evidence they had to support the charges he had made. What was there on the other side? An official communication from the President of the United States, in reply to a solemn call from the House for these very secret records, in which he declares that they were kept under a seal of secrecy too sacred for him to break, even on the solemn requisition of the House of Representatives.

After Mr. Ashmun concluded, committees were appointed to inquire how Mr. Ingersoll had obtained the information which he had communicated to the House; and also inquire into the truth of the charges preferred against Mr. Webster.

A young woman was recently taken to the New York City Hospital from Anthony street with a broken leg, who goes by the name of "Johnny." It is said that she has acted in the capacity of stage driver nearly three years on one of the omnibus routes in the city. Dressed in male apparel, she chewed tobacco, smoked segars, drank brandy, and swore as valiantly as any of her confederates, and her sex was never discovered. It was during this time that she adopted the name of Johnny, which is now the only one by which she is brown.
