OUR SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Few plans of education present more perfection to the casual observer's mind—the acute thinker beholds glaring defects. Like a vast painting, its beauty, not its blemishes, first strike the eye. The foundation is good; the superstructure ill-constructed. This needs amendment, that it may answer the glorious design of its projectors.

Its most visible imperfection is its failure to perpetuate the schools through the entire year; for, in general, they continue scarcely half that time. Nothing could be more detrimental to the progress of the pupils, whose minds, like fresh cut iron, soon grow rusty; the rust of forgetfulness gathers there. The greater part of the knowledge acquired in one session, fades away ere the other commences. Thus the people spend their money to no purpose.

Since unwise legislation has so impoverished the State Treasury, as to render more support from that source impossible, taxation is the only alternative. Then sufficient tax should be levied in every township, ward or borough in the State, to keep the schools open at least 10 months, (if not the whole 12,) in each year. The school law should enjoin this. The law would admit it now, but avarice forbids it. Our school directors either lack nerve to levy that amount, or fear the effect on their own purses. In nine out of ten cases this is the cause. Mostly they are persons whom wealth (not worth) has made influential—whose souls are so contracted that their humanity is measured by the number of dollars required, for which they would gladly rifle the pockets of the slain on the battle field, if an opportunity offered. Yet in too many instances such is the character of the guardians of the youth of the land, just blooming for immortality, whose dispositions are forming, and principles receiving their inclinations for good or ill. Surely the philanthropist has grounds to mourn.

Moreover, it is vain to hope for a favorable change so long as the Government allows any set of men to determine the duration of the schools. That should be fixed by the Legislature, and a sufficiency of means to meet it be exacted. True, an opposite course would be democratic; but the democracy of the day is defrauding the next generation out of its birth-right; for education is its legitimate inheritance. It is a misnomer to term it democracy. It savors more of headlong anarchy; it rushes on blindly, leveling whatever suits not its whim. Such a spirit ought not to superintend the education of the young. When it becomes enlightened and moralized, let it possess that sacred privilege. Our school system should be entrusted to the wisest, most virtuous, and most liberal in the community. If such were the case, it would yield the fruit its worthy framers intended; and we might thankfully enjoy the full fruition of their fondest speculations of its efficacy.

The compensation of the instructor is also too limited. From eighteen to twenty dollars per month is his usual pay. His board costs seven monthly, which leaves him no more than the common laborer. Will a competent teacher toil for such a paltry sum? Certainly not. It would hardly be interest upon the money necessarily expended at an institution of learning to prepare himself, to say nothing of the time spent. As such literary luminaries as Franklin, Roger Sherman, Rittenhouse, and Elisha Burritt shed their light on mankind scarcely one century, our good teachers must emanate from some mental gymnasium. Hence they are required to part with money and time to fit themselves for the most responsible post ever held by man; consequently they cannot labor without reward. He who expects such a thing is unreasonable and insufferably stupid. How shall our school houses be filled with the right kind of men? Hold forth pecuniary inducements. Give your instructors a living salary—may more—one that will leave them, after a life's toil, something respectable to keep them from penury and want in sickness; and not allow the old, infirm, and worn-out faithful servants of the public to die in the cheerless poor-house, unheeded and unlamented.—While knowledge is power, which the educated know and feel, they will not squander their time for nothing.

It is a sad, popular mistake that men of little knowledge are capable of teaching the rudiments of learning. The apprentice cannot make as good an axe or horse-shoe as his experienced master, nor can the sciolist compete with the scholar in disciplining the minds of youth. It is folly to think so. As well might the half-fledged eagle strive to soar like its parent into the vaults above.

PRUDENS.

KISSING.—Dow, Jr. closed a sermon on kissing, with the following quaint advice:

"I want you, my young sinners, to kiss and get married; and then devote your life to morality and money making. Then let your home be well provided with such comforts and necessities as piety, pickles, pots and kettles, brushes brooms, benevolence, bread, charity, cheese, faith, flour, affection, cider, sincerity, vinegar, virtue, wine and wisdom. Have these always on hand, and happiness will be with you. Do not drink any thing intoxicating—eat moderately—go about your business after breakfast—lounge a little after dinner—chat after tea, kiss after quarrelling; then all the joy, the peace and the bliss can afford, shall be yours until the grave closes over you, and your spirits are borne to a brighter and a happier world."

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS has been re-nominated as the Whig candidate for Congress in his district.

Wrong instruction is almost as bad as none. How many men of strong perceptive faculties and sound judgments have lamented all their day the bungling education they received from incompetent teachers. And many a noble intellect will be thus crippled in its energies and utility, before this miserable delusion is eradicated from the public mind. Would that the mass could be made believe and practice upon this view.

There is another cause which militates against the spread of information among our population. It is the ill-grounded popular prejudice against the calling of the teacher. It is estimated on a level with that of the menial. The silliest fellow that walks the street or high-way, esconced behind wealth, sneers at him, though a pigmy in intellect in comparison. Hence the professions of law, medicine and divinity are crowded with individuals who would much better grace a school-room. Why do the graduates of our colleges so universally rush into these already jammed lists? It is on account of the odium attached to the instructor's vocation. Let it be deemed honorable, which it is, and thousands of competent men will flock to it for a livelihood. This, however, can never take place so long as there are other spheres where talents are not undervalued, to which more dignity is awarded by public opinion. The divine is respected everywhere; the teacher hardly anywhere. Why is this wide gulf between them? There exists no such thing in reality. It is the business of the former to call mankind from their evil ways; of the latter to prevent them from falling into the snares of vice. It is the duty of both to instruct, the one mostly those of mature minds; the other tender, pliant youth, just springing into life, with all its varied allurements to lead them from the path of rectitude. Each is derelict to his high calling, if he fail to urge the old and the young to "drink deep of the Pierian Spring" and "Siloa's brook, that flows fast by the oracle of God." The abyss which the public has conceived to exist between them, is imaginary. Such baseless notions and prejudices will not always be entertained. As truth gains ground they are dissipated, as the morning dew melts away before the rising sun. The thought that the dawn of that long-looked for day will soon break upon the world, when his successors shall rank amid the first in the land, gladdens the heart of that man of sorrowful countenance, "who, stunned with the hum, and suffocated with the closeness of the school-room, has spent the whole day (himself against a host) in controlling petulance, exciting indifference to action, striving to enlighten stupidity and laboring to soften obstinacy." He rejoices in the prospect of the glorious era, though his bones shall have crumbled to their mother earth, before its arrival. Come it will. The progress of events foreshadows its ingress.

If the people of Pennsylvania knew their true interest, they would not only amend their School Law, but lay aside their foolish prepossessions against the occupation of the teacher and raise it to its proper level. If they neglect these things long, they will find themselves far in the rear of their brethren in the other Commonwealths, in point of intelligence. The South, once much behind us, will shortly lead us. Awake to their interest, the Southern people liberally recompense their teachers; hence most of the capable ones go thither. The Colleges, Seminaries and Academies of the North are nominal schools for the South. In obedience to the inherent appetite for gain in the human breast, those who wield the ferule go like other men where the pay is best. Think of this ye men of the Keystone state ere it is too late.
