

FROM MEXICO.

Capture of Victoria—Lieut. Col. May Attacked—Loss of his Rearguard—50,000 Mexicans in the Field—Gen. Shields—Gen. Taylor—Vera Cruz.

After a large portion of our edition of last week was worked off, we received news that Gen. Taylor had entered Victoria on the 9th with Gen. Quitman, who had driven the Mexican force 30 or 40 miles before him. The Mexican army is supposed not to be far off. It is supposed that an attack upon Generals Worth and Wool is not meditated by the Mexicans, their object being to retreat before any advance and cut off the supplies of water.

Col. Kenney brought a rumor to Tampico, that 15,000 Mexicans were to attack Saltillo on the 27th ultimo, and that Santa Anna had placed himself between Generals Worth and Taylor, with 35,000 men, and that a general action was immediately expected. Capt. May was attacked by a large body of the enemy and his rear guard cut off by rolling stones into the pass, while examining the pass between Monte Morales and Labrados; his loss has not been ascertained.

Col. Kenny states that the Mexican force at San Luis is 30,000 strong, and their whole force in the field 50,000.—Generals Taylor and Patterson, with 6,000 men, were at Victoria, waiting orders from Gen. Scott. It is rumored that Vera Cruz will be attacked as soon as Gen. Scott assumes the command in the field.

Capt. May's Expedition.

We find the following detailed account of this hazardous undertaking, in the New Orleans Delta.

"Between 7 and 8 o'clock, P. M., Capt. May got in [at Victoria] with his dragoons. He reports the loss of 11 men and their horses, and 7 pack mules.

As far as I can gather the particulars, and they come from Capt. May, they are these:—Between Monte Morales and Linares Capt. May ascertained that there was a pass in a gorge of the mountains, and determined to ascertain the nature of it. His command consisted of two companies of dragoons—some 70 or 80 men. On approaching the foot of the mountain every precaution was used to guard against surprise. A Lieutenant, with 12 men, acted as the rearguard and guard of the pack mules of the command, who remained some few hundred yards in the rear, and in this way they progressed slowly and carefully, until they found out the pass, which was so narrow that it was with much difficulty a single horse could go through it. But May was determined to traverse it, and make what discoveries he could on the other side. Dismounting himself and men, he led his horse and the way, and after experiencing much difficulty in getting from rock to rock, the command ultimately succeeded in getting through. On the right hand side of this pass there is a perpendicular of some 600 feet or so high, as some of the men say, "that a man up there looked like a little boy."

On the left hand, after 10 or 12 feet of perpendicular, there was a gradual slope to the top on which an enemy could run down, fire a piece and then return. It is represented as being the most dangerous pass to a daring enemy that is known, and one where a few determined men could stop the advance of thousands. After going as far on the other side as was thought necessary they retraced their steps with the same caution observed in effecting the passage. But the rearguard were not so lucky in getting through this time, for it appears after the Lieutenant and Sergeant got through, a large body of men, who stationed themselves on the perpendicular side, showered down stones from the top so fast and so heavy, that their advance was completely cut off; and that they were either killed, or taken prisoners, or made their escape to the other side. It seems that Capt. May was continually urging vigilance, and left his best bugler in the rear to sound the alarm in case of accident, as though he anticipated an attack.

A rumbling noise in the pass caused them to halt for the rearguard, but they not coming up when he thought it was time for them to reach him, he wheeled about and went into the direction of the pass again at full speed. He shortly met the Lieutenant and Sergeant, and immediately demanded of the former—"Where's your men?" The answer of the Lieutenant was, "close at hand," at the same time turning his head around as if with the expectation of seeing them just behind him. But there were none there save the Sergeant, and the truth immediately flashed upon the commander that something was wrong with them. As quick as thought, and the nature of the path would permit, they dashed off for the pass, and when they reached it found that a large number of stones had been thrown down, and discovered traces of blood along the defile. They followed up as fast as possible, but it was of no avail; they could make no further discoveries, nor learn anything of the fate of their companions, so they sorrowfully retraced their steps, and arrived here as above noticed.

I have given the above truly, as it was related to me, without omission or addition, and it is the received and acknowledged account of the unfortunate affair. It may seem strange, and wanting in detail; but as it involves several delicate points, I do not feel warranted in surmising what may have made out a good story, and therefore prefer putting it down in its apparently unfinished recital, rather than draw on the imagination for what is behind. May has put the Lieutenant under arrest and many blame him for being in advance of his guard when his post was in the rear of it. As to his travelling on without discovering that his command was absent, will be readily credited by any one who is familiar with travel in a chapparel country, or in any narrow pass where two abreast cannot proceed.

In coming through the pass, the men were necessarily 15 or 20 feet apart—their safety demanded this—and with the noise on the stones, made by his own horse's feet and those of the Sergeant's horse, and this in coming down a declivity, it is not strange, at least to me, that he did not miss them; and as to his looking back to see them, that may have been out of the question, as it is natural to suppose he needed the constant use of his eyes to guide his horse over the rugged path. Military discipline, no doubt, demanded his arrest, but capture should be reserved until the whole statement of the mishap is made known by some one who witnessed it.—Up to this time I do not believe that Gen. Taylor is possessed of more detail than is here set down.

It is not thought that any regular soldiers of the Mexican army had a hand in this business. Rancheros and banditti, actuated more by plunder than any thing else, are believed to have cut them off, thinking probably that there was more of value than what they obtained. In the hands of such men the fate of the prisoners is doubtful, though they would be perfectly safe in falling into the hands of an officer of the army.

The Movements of Our Army.

In the course of a few days or a few weeks, says the Phila. Saturday Gleaner, we may look for stirring intelligence from the Army. A movement of no little importance was on foot at the last dates. General Scott had not arrived at Tampico on the 12th, but he was hourly expected, and we have reason to believe that the operations of our troops were in a great measure suspended with the object of awaiting his arrival. It is also probable that Gen. Scott would, before finally determining upon any plan, hold a long and confidential interview with Gen. Taylor, and obtain from that gallant officer, all the information in his possession having an immediate bearing upon the campaign. The two Generals had not met at our last accounts. A friend who has received a letter dated Tampico, Jan. 12, states that Scott was at Brazos, but had not communicated with Gen. Taylor. The disposition of the army was such as would probably favor the operations of the "Hero of Chippewa." The troops were in position to attack San Luis de Potosi, or to march to any other point. It remains to be seen, whether on the arrival of General Scott, an attempt will be made to capture Vera Cruz and the Castle—an expedition he planned to march to Tuzupan, and then to the city of Mexico—or an effort to be at once made to give battle to Santa Anna at San Luis de Potosi. General Scott is doubtless authorized to pursue the plan he shall deem most advisable under the circumstances, and after he shall have consulted with Gen. Taylor and the other leading officers, who have so long been in the field in Mexico. Indeed, we have reason to believe that an expedition recently left Tampico for Laguna de la Puerta, 9-12 miles on the Altamira road, with instructions to remain there and await further orders. Meanwhile, despatches were received from Gen. Taylor, and the troops were ordered to march back again which they did accordingly. We repeat, immediately after Gen. Scott shall have consulted Old Rough and Ready, some bold movement will be determined upon, some enterprise of no ordinary character, and calculated to exert a powerful influence upon the war.

Pa. Volunteers—The Killers. The following is an extract of a letter to the North American, dated

SHIP RUSSELL GLOVER, }
Off the Mississippi, Jan. 17, 1847. }

Our stay in New Orleans has been a very disagreeable one, owing to the conduct of some outlaws, "the Killers," in Capt. Hill's company. By these acts, our regiment became the terror of the whole vicinity. They entered houses, turned out the owners and their families, and attempted indignities upon the females. On the evening of the 11th, they entered the house of a Frenchman, and broke into the chamber of his daughter, when he fired and shot two of them. Capt. Hill came up with a detachment of fifty men, and took the rest to prison. The evening before we left New Orleans they entered his tent and attempted to murder him. The next day he threw up in commission and left for Washington. This state of things must now cease. We are about entering the enemy's country, and martial law will be strictly enforced. Those who mutinate will be instantly shot.

The Pleasures of Soldiering.

The New Orleans papers state that that city was visited on the night of the 23d ult. with a thunder storm of great violence. The rain descended in torrents all that night and part of the next day, deluging the country all around the city. The second Regiment of Mississippi volunteers and the second Regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers were encamped on the Battle Ground a few miles below the city, and, according to the New Orleans Tropic, "up to their knees in mud and water"—and this, too, remarks that journal, when the U. S. Barracks were unoccupied. The Cameron Guards, Stockton Artillerists and Philadelphia Rangers had nearly all their blankets swept away by the waters. The Topic adds:—

"About two hundred of the Pennsylvanians have left the camp and have come up to the city. Fifteen or more left last evening in one of the steamers for 'home, sweet home,' and we are informed that many more will start by the first opportunity.

In what we have said we have not designed reflecting upon any officer of the Government in this city. It is the Government that we aim at. Its agents at this point (the base of all the army operations) should have been supplied with the requisite means to furnish quarters, clothing, provisions, and every thing necessary for the health and comfort of the noble spirits who patriotically embarked in their country's service."

Much sickness prevailed among the Mississippians; scarcely a day passed without a death in their ranks; and it was rumored that six or seven had died on the night of the 23d ult. The authorities of New Orleans and the humane physicians of that city were unremitting in their attentions to the sick.

GEN. TAYLOR AND THE VOLUNTEERS.—A correspondent from Victoria, thus describes a scene which occurred shortly after Gen. Taylor's arrival at that place:

"Gen. Taylor visited the Illinois volunteers yesterday, and the way the boys crowded around him threatened immediate suffocation. By way of salutation, I verily believe the old General pulled at his cap five thousand times, and I was looking every minute to see him pull the front piece off. The General was mounted on a large and gentle mule, whilst his orderly rode a splendid dragoon horse, and himself dressed in a clean and handsome uniform whilst the General had on that same old black frock coat, and a big Mexican straw hat. Mr. Fanning, the orderly, got about six salutes to Taylor's one, the "suckers" taking him for the General, and wondering why they called him old Taylor. When at last they found out that the old rancho was the sure-enough General, they inferred, from his plain appearance, that it would be nothing amiss to offer him a hand to shake, and they went at it with such good will, that, by the time the two regiments finished squeezing it, there could have been little feeling left in it. As he rode off, there were many who wondered whether that was the animal on which he charged the Mexicans.

Monroe Edwards, the notorious swindler, died in the Prison Hospital at Sing Sing, on Friday morning last, of consumption. His health has been failing for some time past, but he had not been in the Hospital, we believe, more than three weeks.

The President afforded "aid and comfort to the enemy" by giving them a General; and now his friends are increasing that "comfort" by denouncing the General of the American forces!—As the President gave Santa Anna his freedom, we should not be surprised to find him trying to balance the account by imprisoning Gen. Taylor.

Messrs. Robinson, Collins & Co.—Sirs: This is to inform you that I was afflicted for 20 years with a violent pain in my breast, so much so that I could hardly lay in bed at night. Cough attended, followed by emaciation and other decided symptoms of consumption. I applied to several eminent physicians, and took a great deal of medicine without any relief whatever. I was advised to try Dr. Davis's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar, of which I took two bottles, which entirely relieved me of my complaint; therefore I can with confidence recommend it to all who are in a like manner afflicted, as a most valuable Medicine.
