

Legend of Starved Rock.

Long and fiercely had savage warfare raged between two tribes in the Far West. From the shores of Lake Michigan to the banks of the Illinois, step by step, the invaded tribe had contended for the homes of their wives and children; and as the triumphant invaders sped onward in their wild career, leaving behind them the smouldering ashes of the wigwam and the mangled forms of helpless infancy and feeble old age, fainter grew the hopes of that feeble but gallant band, of successful resistance.

The Illinois, once a numerous and powerful tribe, claimed as their hunting grounds the beautiful prairies and gently sloping hills crowned with majestic forests, that stretch in rich luxuriance from the shores of Lake Michigan to the banks of the Mississippi. In an evil hour, the Potawatomies, a tribe inhabiting the eastern shores of Lake Michigan, stirred up by that worst foe of the red man, "Fire Water," for imagined wrongs or to glut a savage thirst for blood, waged a war of extermination against the Illinois.

Driven backward, still fiercely contending for each foot of soil they claimed as the gift of the Great Spirit, the feeble band of Illinois, vanquished in battle, yet disdaining to surrender meekly to their foes, like a stag at bay, stood beneath the towering bluff of their own river, glaring upon their surrounding foes, in all the impotence of revengeful despair. Suddenly, with a cry they spring forward, scale the cliff, and far above their foes ring out the shrill cry of defiance and death. Alas, short is their triumph. The wily enemy sees and at once secures his prey; the cliff stands insulated on the banks of the river, rising full a hundred feet above the surface of the water, and towards the land it is inaccessible save at one point. On every side were the besiegers, with the deadly arrow pointed, and the tomahawk uplifted. Close beneath the cliff lurked the canoe, with its murderous occupant, ready to impale the desperate wretch who, maddened by thirst, in a moment of frenzy should fling himself headlong into the cool water beneath.

Night came. Weary and exhausted, the besieged lay down on the barren rock. The twilight dew fell softly on their burning brows, and the cool breeze played amid their dark locks. Many an eye was turned upward in the silent watches of that fearful night, and faith fearfully strove to lift the dark pall that shadowed the future. Somewhere beyond those stars lay the happy hunting-grounds which their fathers trod, and to which their wives and little ones were beckoning them. Fierce memories of the dark strife, even the deep burning for revenge, were now forgotten, and as a dream had passed, its wild hopes, its burning desires, its deeds of daring were remembered no more. Slowly from their midst there rose an aged chief. His white hair gleamed in the wan sunlight, like the mist on the brow of the dark hills. Every eye was en- chained; the deep breathing of the warrior alone broke the stillness. Mournful as the sound of the muffled drum or the wailing of the autumn wind, rose the chant of the death song. The owl answered from her lonely nest, and from the echoing cliffs the sad wail reverberated along the shores of the river. The aged warrior sang; and, as memory traced years of his life, with kindling eye he recounted the deeds of daring he had done: when the Illinois, numerous as the buffalo on the plain, held all the neighboring tribes in awe—when their warriors were swift of foot and sure of hand—and while the deer and panther and bear were an easy prey, their war cry echoed through the forest, and the scalps of their enemies were in every wigwam. Triumphant rang the song of the chieftain, and quick as thought the vanquished warriors sprang to their feet, fiercely brandishing the battle axe above their heads, and yelling the war whoop.

As the last faint echo sighed across the bosom of the waters, a plaintive moan, like that of the turtle-dove, was heard from the depths of the neighboring wood. A noble brave, who, after joining in the exulting war whoop, had thrown himself despairingly upon the ground, rose, and bending eagerly forward, listened to the faint cry. Again it was heard. The warrior sprang forward, and had not his intention been seen, and a strong arm prevented, he had thrown himself headlong from the cliff, to find death or deliverance in the waters beneath.

In the wild uproar and confusion of the attack upon the last village of the Illinois, a young matron had escaped with her child from the horrid massacre, and, concealing herself in the forest, had followed for days on the trail of the pursuers and the pursued, subsisting upon wild fruits and nuts, bearing her child in her arms, and living only in the hope that her warrior would yet triumph, or that she should share his fate. She had traced them to the fatal rock, and with woman's love in her heart, nerving her feeble arm, she resolved to attempt his rescue. Silently as the autumn leaf on the bosom of the wave, a light canoe glides within the shadow of the opposite bluff. The mother sat with her child, cautiously moving the frail bark; and as favored by an overhanging tree, it shot out partly across the stream, the warrior on the cliff leaped boldly into the water. The whizzing arrows flew, death-wounded. With a fearful cry the warrior leaped from the dark waters, then sank into their depths to rise no more. At the same moment, clasping her child to her breast, the mother sprang from the canoe, and found a grave with her warrior husband in the bosom of the placid river.

Again the death song arose from the fugitives on the rock; and when the morning broke, it brought no hope to them. The noontide sun beat fiercely on their throbbing brows, and their parched lips refused them utterance. Far below the bright river swept along a thousand sparkling ripples, glancing in the sunbeams, its cool depths mocking their burning thirst, and tempting them to seek a watery grave. But pride forbade—sooner linger on, enduring the horrors of starvation, till death should come to their relief, than that their hated enemies should triumph. Never should the scalps of the Illinois grace the wigwam of their foes. As they had lived, so would they die, unconquerable to the last. Proudly as the savage warrior upon his funeral pile disdains to glut the malice of his foes by betrayal of fear or suffering, so did that devoted band upon the desert rock nerve themselves to endure the pangs of death by starvation. When, spent and feeble, their voices refused to chant the death song, with one mighty effort they raised the war whoop.—Fierce, but brief, was the cry—the triumph of pride and revenge over physical suffering.

The startled foe seized the tomahawk, and replied in proud defiance. It was in vain. No sound was heard from the cliff. Silently as the shadows steal across the landscape, at eventide the warriors passed away. The wolf howls for her mate from the dark rock, and the loathsome bird of prey circles above them. There are none to bury them. They are the last of their race. M. L. B.

N. B. About fourteen years ago, the writer first heard of the Starved Rock, from a friend who had purchased lands on the Illinois river, including its site. He had often climbed the rocky cliff, where stone arrow-heads and human bones still attest the truth of the leading facts upon which this sketch is founded.

The Soldier's Last Letter. There is touching interest as well as judicious counsel in the following beautiful extract, published by the Alton Telegraph, from a letter written on the eve of the battle of Buena Vista, by Lieut. Fletcher of the Illinois Volunteers, who fell on the next day in the fight:

DEAR COLONEL:—To-morrow we expect to have an engagement with a superior Mexican force; and, on the eve of the affair, I have believed it proper to address you a few lines. As you are well aware, the object of my heart is the welfare of my little child; and as far as I have been able, I have provided for her.

Should I fall, I leave her entirely with you and your wife; but I have written to my brother, requesting him to throw his brotherly protection over her; and if, at any time, you think fit to send her to him, he will receive her as his own child, and protect her as such. Should she remain with you, I wish that she should receive a good education as the little means left her will afford; and above all things, teach her that truth and virtue are to women what the soul is to the body—the life of its life. Teach her that to be just to all—in thought—in word—in deed, is the true, the great aim of a good mind; and those who strive to accomplish that purpose, seldom fail to live at peace with the world, and accomplish the "great destiny" for which they are created.

"Did You Ever." Did you ever see a newspaper correspondent who did not write to the editor of a "highly interesting" paper. Did you ever see a candidate for office who, in the course of his canvass, could detect any personal deformity in the voters' children—or who saw any thing else than "interesting babies" in his travels? Did you ever see a retail trader who did not sell his goods "50 per cent cheaper than any other house in town;" or a man disposing of his stock, who was not "selling off at first cost?" Did you ever see a vendor of patent medicines who was not patronized by the President and several members of Congress?

Did you ever see a pretender, whatever might be his peculiar calling, who was not willing to submit his claims to a discerning public? Did you ever see a steamboat blow up for which blame could attach to the captain or engineer? Did you ever see a lawyer address any other than a "highly intelligent and respectable jury?" Did you ever see a man removed from office who was not "proscribed for his independence, and persecuted for his politics?"

Valuable Ore-Bank & Water-Power For Sale.

THE subscriber wishes to dispose of about 300 acres of very rich Ore and Coal Lands situated on the waters of Sandy Creek, in Perry township, Jefferson county, Penn'a.

The property is situated on three branches of Sandy Creek, which unite upon the premises, affording abundant power for seven Furnaces, Forges, Rolling-Mills &c., all within about one fourth of a mile of the Ore bank. The Ore is of the same kind, but of a richer quality, than is used at the Great West term works in Armstrong county. There are also on the premises abundance of Bituminous Coal, Limestone, and Sandstone. The Creek is now navigable, for Arks, &c. in time of high water, from within seven miles of the property, and could, with little expense, be made so from the premises. There is a Saw-Mill in operation on the premises. The land is all well timbered, and well timbered lands may be purchased in the immediate neighborhood at from one to two dollars per acre.

This property undoubtedly affords facilities for the manufacture of iron, possessed by few situations in Pennsylvania, and to an enterprising capitalist acquainted with the business is a location much to be desired.

As this advertisement is merely intended to draw the attention of those acquainted with the iron business to the lands, the subscriber deems it unnecessary to dwell longer on the advantages possessed by this property, as those wishing to purchase will of course call and examine it. Those desirous of further particulars are invited to call on the subscriber living on the premises, or on Mr. Gaskell, Agent of the Holland Land Company, at Punxsatwney, Jefferson county.

Important to Stove Dealers.

THE attention of Stove Dealers in this place is invited to our assortment of Cooking, Parlor, Hall and Office Stoves, and especially to Wood's Empire Hot Air Cooking Stove.

As the best cooking apparatus ever invented, it having obtained a celebrity, wherever it has been introduced, never before attained by any Cooking Stove. The operation of baking being performed in this stove by hot Air, instead of heat radiated from the open plates, renders it equal for baking to a Brick Oven, or to the Tin oven for roasting; making it unnecessary to turn or change the article while cooking, and removing all liability to burn. We are desirous to have the Stove introduced in this market, and to that end liberal terms will be given to a responsible dealer, willing to take hold of them, and only one will be permitted to sell them in the place. Dr. Kellers Vegetable Panacea.

For the removal and permanent cure of all diseases arising from an impure state of the Blood and habit of the body, viz: Chronic affections of the Chest, Pleurisy, Bronchitis, Catarrh, &c.—Scrofula in all its stages, Tetter, Scald-head, Cancerous affections of the body, face and Extremities, Chronic Rheumatism, Chronic enlargements of the ligaments and joints, White Swellings, Syphilitic Affections, Constitutional disorders arising from debility, Mercurial and hereditary predispositions, &c.

It is now admitted by Pathologists, that no original temper, complexion, constitution, or form of body, confers complete immunity from Hereditary diseases; that scrofula, consumption and other affections having a similarity of origin occur in all; although observation convinces us, that individuals and families, possessing certain characteristics are more frequently the subject of these maladies than others. These diseases are a morbid condition of the whole system of nutrition—these products being but the effects of an alteration of the Blood and secretions.—the ulcers, abscess, enlarged glands, inflammations, &c., being merely attendant phenomena. The cause exists prior to the phenomena, and must be destroyed before perfect health can be established. This may be done by Dr. Keller's Vegetable Panacea, the most certain remedy for all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood and system of nutrition, ever presented to the notice of the afflicted.

Prepared corner of 31 and South streets, Philadelphia and sold by John N. Prowell, and Jones & Simonton, Huntingdon, and by Druggists and Merchants throughout the country. Price—$1 per bottle, large size. June 2, 1847.
