FALLING IN LOVE.

Albert Morris was a young Philadelphian of family, wealth, fine talent, considerable beauty, and, mirabile dictu!

It chanced that one sunny afternoon in October, this unexceptionable young hero of ours was sauntering down Chesnut St. in a listless, or rather unhappy mood, his brows lowering and his eyes glancing about with a look of restless discontent.

He began to perceive that if not actually in love, he was on the dreary confines of that realm, taking in the first intoxicating breathings of its delicious atmosphere.

He began to perceive that if not actually in love, he was on the dreary confines of that realm, taking in the first intoxicating breathings of its delicious atmosphere.

Morris had first met Miss Atwood at a brilliant party given in her honor on her return from Europe where she had spent nearly two years; and he was first delighted to find that, unlike most young tourists, she could converse without letting her sentences of good, hearty English, become disjointed by German, go off in nervous spasms of French, or faint away into Italian.

Miss Atwood was an undeniable beauty, and a belle of much celebrity. Her taste in dress was exquisite, though rather on the magnificent order. She had many accomplishments, a keen wit, and some genius; so it is little wonder that, as far as she had revealed herself, she had been enchanting to the poetical and somewhat impressive Albert Morris.

And Miss Atwood? Why, she smiled sweetly on all he said, or did, and bent herself slightly toward him, very slightly, from the pedestal of her pride. With a most comfortable faith in her own irresistibility, she evidently considered the heart of every man she met as a kind of fruit, very ripe and very soft, and only waiting the least possible shake on her part to fall into her hand or at her feet.

But let us return to that walk of our hero's down Chesnut Street. Suddenly he gave an eager look forward, his eye brightened, his cheek flushed, and his step quickened!

"Only last night," she replied; and after a few words more, passed on. Morris, his heart filled with indescribable emotion, involuntarily turned his head to look after her.

On the morning after the street incident which was the stepping-stone to the happy fortune of Albert Morris, Miss Clara Atwood was seated in her most graceful attitude on a purple velvet sofa in an elegant parlor, awaiting a call from that self same gentleman.

Without frugality none can be rich, and with it, very few would be poor.

and replacing them in the basket of the grateful old dame, and a sweet, kind voice said, "Oh do not thank me; it is nothing," and then Morris caught a glimpse of a fair young face—not a beautiful face, but one fresh and sunny, and wearing an expression pure and noble, and good withal.

At that moment the soulless statue Albert had half deified by his admiring homage, fell from its pedestal, and a fair idea of womanly loveliness, sanctioned by goodness, mounted triumphantly to its place.

Do you condemn my hero when I say that he followed at a respectful distance behind the young Quakeress as she walked up Chesnut Street, then turned and passed up Seventh to Arch, and up Arch almost to Broad. Finally she ran up some dazzling white marble steps, and entered a plain but elegant-looking mansion.

As might have been anticipated, Mr. Albert Morris suddenly became an active peace maker. Such cold feelings of estrangement between those connected by the ties of kindred was unnatural, unchristian, and ought no longer to exist!

I surely need not say how glad was Albert in his heart when he listened daily to the praises of "dear, gifted Cousin Annie," from his affectionate sisters and enthusiastic young brothers, and even from his thoughtful and affectionate mother.

It happened that Annie was deep in the study of the German at that time, and Albert presently discovered that he really must rub up his recollection of that grand language. After this, what enchanted "long mornings," what charming jaw-dislocating hours, they spent over Goethe, and Rieher, and Korner, and Schelling, and Schlegel, &c.

"My dear Albert," said Annie Morris, now two months a wife, "what possessed thee to send home that enormous orange tree! I could scarcely find room for it in our conservatory!"

"Ah, Annie," he replied, "I love the orange; it is a sacred fruit to me."

"Now what can't thou mean?" said the little wife, with some surprise. "Listen to me, then, my love," he rejoined. "As by the apple Adam lost his paradise, so by the orange have I found mine.—What, still mystified? Ah, bless you, and bless all crippled old orange women, say I!"

"Oh, Albert?" cried Annie blushing deeply and smiling through her tears, as she wound her arms round the neck of her young husband, "didn't thou see that? I was a little ashamed at the time, there was so many looking at me—but I could not help it."

"To be sure you could not help it; your hands go about such work on their own account. Help it, indeed!"

Without frugality none can be rich, and with it, very few would be poor.
