

Mexico; these westwardly along the whole southern boundary of New Mexico, which runs north of the town called Passo, to its western termination; thence northward along the western line of New Mexico until it intersects the first branch of the river Gila, or if it should not intersect any branch of that river, then to the point on the said line nearest to such branch, and thence in a direct line to the same; thence down the middle of the said branch, and of the said river, until it empties into the Rio Colorado; thence across the Rio Colorado, following the division line between Upper and Lower California, to the Pacific Ocean.

The eighth article of the treaty is in the following terms: "Now established in territories previously belonging to Mexico, and which remain for the future within the limits of the United States, defined by the present treaty, shall be free to continue where they now reside, or to remove at any time to the Mexican Republic, retaining the property which they possess in the said territories, or disposing thereof, and conveying the property wherever they please, without their being subject on this account to any contribution, tax or charge whatever. Those who shall prefer to remain in the said territories may either retain the title and rights of Mexican citizens or acquire those of citizens of the United States; but they shall be under obligation to make their election within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty, and those who shall remain in the said territories after the expiration of that year, without having declared their intention to retain the character of Mexicans, shall be considered to have elected to become citizens of the United States. In the said territories property of every description now belonging to Mexicans not established there shall be inviolably respected—the present owners, the heirs of these, and all Mexicans who may hereafter acquire said property by contract, shall enjoy with respect to it the same rights and privileges as if the same belonged to citizens of the United States.

The ninth article of the treaty is in these words: "The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, preferring what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and be admitted at the proper time, to be judged of by the Congress of the United States, to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens, according to the principle of the Constitution, and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion, without restriction.

It is plain, therefore, in the face of these treaty stipulations, that all Mexico, established in Territories north or east of the line of demarcation already mentioned, come within the protection of the 9th article, and that the treaty being a part of the supreme law of the land, does extend over all such Mexicans, and assures to them perfect security in the enjoyment of their liberty and property, as well as in the free exercise of their religion.

And this supreme law being in actual force over this territory, is to be maintained until it shall be displaced or suspended by other legal provisions; and if it is obstructed or resisted by combinations to prevent its being enforced by the civil authority, the care is on the executive government to enforce these provisions. Neither the Constitution, or the laws, nor my duty, or my oath of office, leave me any alternative, or any choice in my mode of action.

The Executive Government of the U. States has no power or authority to determine what was the true line of demarcation between Mexico and the United States before the treaty, and to suppose that the United States has any power now, since the question has become a question between the State of Texas and the United States. So far as this boundary is doubtful, that doubt can only be removed by some act of Congress to which the assent of the State of Texas may be necessary, or by some approval of the judicial authorities.

But, in the mean time, if disturbances or collisions arise, or should be threatened, it is absolutely incumbent on the executive government, however painful the duty, to take care that the laws be faithfully maintained, and he can regard only the actual state of things as it existed at the date of the treaty, and is bound to protect all inhabitants who were then within the line of demarcation, north and east of the line of demarcation, in the full enjoyment of their liberty and property, according to the provisions of the ninth article of the treaty. In other words all must now be regarded as New Mexico citizens of Mexico at the date of the treaty, until a definite line of boundary shall be established by competent authority. This assertion of duty to protect the people of New Mexico from threatened violence, or from seizure to be carried into Texas for trial for alleged offences against Texas laws, does not at all include any claim of power on the part of the Executive to establish any civil or military government within that Territory.

That power belongs exclusively to the legislative department, where Congress is the sole Judge of the time and manner of creating or overruling such governments. The duty of the Executive is only to see the execution of the laws and the maintenance of treaties actually in force, and the protection of all the people of the U. States, and the enjoyment of the rights which those treaties and laws guarantee.

It is exceedingly desirable that no occasion shall arise for the exercise of the powers thus vested in the President by the Constitution and the laws.—With whatever mildness those powers might be executed, or however clear the case of necessity, yet consequences might nevertheless follow of which no human sagacity can foresee either the evils or the end.

Having thus laid before Congress the communication of His Excellency, the Governor of Texas, and the answer thereto, and having made such observations as I have thought the occasion called for, respecting constitutional obligations which may arise in the further progress of things, and may devolve on me to be performed, I hope I shall not be regarded as having stepped aside from the line of my duty, notwithstanding that the subject of the communication is now before both Houses. I express my deep and earnest conviction of the importance of an immediate decision or arrangement, or settlement of the question of boundary between Texas and New Mexico.

All considerations of justice, general expediency and domestic tranquility, call for this. It seems to be in its character, and by position, the first, or one of the first questions growing out of the position of California and New Mexico, and now requiring decision. No Government can be established in New Mexico, either State or Territorial, until it shall be first ascertained what New Mexico is, and what are her boundaries. These cannot be fixed or known until the line of division between her and Texas shall be established, and established by and numerous and weighty reasons concur, in my judgment, to show that this divisional line should be established by Congress with the assent of the Government of Texas.

In the first place, this seems by far the most proper mode of proceeding by which the end can be accomplished. If the usual proceedings were resorted to, such proceedings would be slow, and years would pass by, in all probability, before the controversy would be ended. So great a delay in this case is to be avoided, if possible. Such delay would be every way inconvenient, and might be the occasion of disturbances and collisions.

For the same reason I would, with the utmost deference to the wisdom of Congress, express a doubt of the expediency of the appointment of Commissioners, and of an examination, estimate, and an award of indemnity to be made by them.

This would be but a species of arbitration which would last as long as a suit at law. So far as I am able to comprehend the case, the general facts are now all known, and Congress is capable of deciding on it justly and properly, as it probably would be after the report of the Commissioners. The claim of title on the part of Texas appears to Congress to be well founded, in whole or in part. It is in the competency of Congress to offer an indemnity for the surrender of her claims. In a case like this, surrounded as it is by many cogent considerations, all calling for amicable adjustment and immediate settlement, the government of the United States would be justified, in my opinion, in allowing an indemnity to Texas, not unreasonable and extravagant, but fair, liberal, and awarded in a just spirit of accommodation.

I think no event would be hailed with more gratification by the people of the U. States, than the amicable adjustment of questions of difficulty, which have now for a long time agitated the country, and which tend to the extension of other subjects, the time and attention of Congress. Having thus freely communicated the result of my own reflections on the most admirable mode of adjusting the boundary question, I shall nevertheless, cheerfully acquiesce in any other mode which the wisdom of Congress may desire.

In conclusion, I repeat my conviction that every consideration of the public interest manifests the necessity of a provision by Congress for the settlement of this boundary question before the present session be brought to a close. The settlement of other questions connected with the same subject, within the same period, is greatly to be desired; but the adjustment of this appears to me to be in the highest degree important. In the event of such an adjustment, we may well hope that there will follow a return of harmony and goodwill, with an increased attachment to the Union, and the general satisfaction of this country.
