

The End of Summer.

So gradually and so imperceptibly has the glowing warmth of Summer subsided into the mellowed temperature of Autumn, that, until recently, the transition was scarcely noticed, and it was difficult to designate any point at which it could be said the one season ended and the other began. The weather does not always regard the almanac and it often happens that Summer invades the month of September and takes possession of the chief part of it—throwing even the beams of its wanning splendor upon the confines of October. For these encroachments Winter, in its turn, lays its frigid hand upon the realms allotted to Spring, and seizes upon March as its own proper domain.

But we are now reminded that Summer is really gone. The changing hues of the forest foliage gave notice some weeks ago of the approach of a colder season; but so mild and genial were the sun's rays, so bland the atmosphere, that the gorgeous vesture of the woods, with its many tinted colors, seemed rather the magnificent drapery of a mature Summer than the symbol of approaching frost.

The frost has come. "The air bites shrewdly," as Hamlet says, "it is very cold." That is to say, we have had a passing nip from the Arctic regions, and coming as it does so close upon the balmy breathings of lingering Summer, it brings shivering upon its wings.

It is the harbinger of Winter. Now the long disused garments of woollen, the cloak, the over-coat, are brought forth from the recesses where it is to be hoped some careful housewife had packed them away in security from the moths. Now it is discovered that the days are quite short, while the evenings are growing longer and longer; and the genial attractions of the fireside, associated with pleasant reminiscences of social and household enjoyments, again claim their own and have their claim allowed.

A transition point like this, at which a marked change takes place between seasons—at which we stand with Summer fresh about us and look Winter in the face—constitutes an interesting period in the year, and is analogous to some decisive epoch in human affairs when an old system, with its associations still lingering and striving to maintain their hold, gives way to a new order of things which inexorably demands its place and sway. We bid adieu to Summer and its flowers, and turn to encounter the rugged realities of Winter, as we would dismiss from the mind some beautiful vision of the fancy upon which imagination had loved to dwell, and go to meet the call of duty which gives us facts to deal with and the imperative requisitions of daily responsibilities and business.

Aphorisms from Punch.

The men who flatter women do not know them sufficiently, and the men who only abuse them do not know them at all. Romances generally end with a marriage. And many young girls, when they leave school, would wish to go through the romance of life—as they do most romances—by beginning at the end.

Women should rule, but not govern.

If you wish to learn the worst fault of a woman, praise her highly to her friends.

Woman is a most beautiful book, that too frequently is condemned for its errata.

You can generally tell how popular you are with a lady, by the length of time she keeps you waiting whilst dressing to receive you.

A fan is a most handy little instrument for those who have lost the art of blushing.

Vows are the bad money—the I O U's and post-obts with which the man pays a woman the debts of his heart.

If a young lady has a purse with two ends—silver in one end, and gold in the other—she is sure to open the gold end first.

The only time when women talk much amongst one another, is when they are waiting for the gentlemen after dinner.

The eyes of a pretty woman are the interpreters of the language of her heart.—They translate what her tongue has a great difficulty in expressing.

If you wish to close a lady's lips, ask her age.

We know nothing of the virtue of the following, which we cut from the Albany Register:

A physician of Rome has recently succeeded in discovering a liquid possessing so extraordinary a power of coagulating blood, that if to a large basin containing fluid one drop of the stypic be added, complete solidification ensues, so that the basin may be inverted without causing any blood to be lost. The following is its preparation. Take 8 ounces of gum benzoin, one pond of alum, and ten pints of water. Boil all together for the space of eight hours, in an earthenware glazed vessel, frequently stirring the mass, and adding water sufficient to make up the original quantity of that lost by the ebullition, taking care, however, to add the water so gradually that boiling may not be suspended. The liquid portion of the compound is now to be strained off, and preserved in well corked bottles."

A young man without money is like a steamboat without fuel. He can't go a head. Among the ladies he is like the moon of a cloudy night—he don't shine.

Young ladies are like arrows; they cannot be got off without a beau.
