stretched in the dying strife for ever! "Af time to die?" Yea, oh my God, my God, what means it; an eternity to die; An Xeernity to Die! Oh, come to Jesus; come to the Saviour now. Here by this glorious grave; here, sitting in the great shadow of death, I plead with you; come now; come just as you are; for believe me, "There is a time to die."

But has this truth a terror only! Is not the Shechinah of gloom as well a Shechinah of glory? Yes, indeed yes—unto every redeemed soul on earth the text's utterance is of blessedness. "There is a time to die." Glory be to God for the sweet truth. This bitter, fleeting, disappointing world, is not cur only house. The race ends with the crowning; the battle with the victory; the pilgrimage with the home-welcome; the shadow midnight with the eternal day; "Af time to die." And the ternal day: "Af time to die." Alony this then—a time to get through trouble, to get through conflicts, to get through the mighly trials of stormy world, to escape from sorrow and sinfulness, to shake the dust, as an eagle the raindrops, from the upscaring region. A time to mount to the far skies; to meet again in tender love the departed; to wall by the green pastures; to recline by the still waters; to die no more; to suffer no more; to be at home with the beloved of earth and the beloved in heaven. Glory be unto God then for the great truth—terrible to sinfulness and to sense, but precious to a home-sick love and a heaven-bond faith. "There is a time to die."

Aye, and in this more blessed still, that there is one time only. There is no more death in heaver; no shadow of the monster falls on the still waters; or darkens the portals of the many manisons of the better land. Joy, joy for this, that they had have gotton the victory die not again. Did our lamented statesman trust in the Saviour! We believe so—"That Rod," had been the sum as I am determand that the propagation of the sum of the propagation of the hope, shall not fling again their deepening shadow.

"After life's fittul fever he sleeps well."

No ingratitude can reach his noble spirit more; no neglect distress him; no slander reach him now. Ah, it was well for him that he died; what are the noisy hozannas of a breathing multitude, that his rival shall hear, to the great voices he now heareth? Ah, the triumphal chariot that shall bear the successful candidate to a nation's capitol, will bear at best a m.r.tul, with a troubled heart and an anxious spirit. But glory and joy for him-the procession which has just passed, doing loftiest honor unto the noblest of them all, followed in the train of an immortal, bearing into a grave more glorious than a throne, a restful bosom, an untroubled heart.

Oh if trusting, as we hope, in Jesus, he went through the grave with that sweet whisper, "I live still."—I live still."—then how poor to him must now seem all earthly honors.

how poor to him must now seem all earthly honors. Ah, there is no glorious form on earth: no conqueror in his mighty mail; no king in his regalia, whose glory and joy touch even the hem of the garment of a redeemed and a risen one. eemed and a risen one.
Oh, I understand it now---the burden of

Oh, I understand it now—the ourten of those mysterious and seraphic words—"Blessed are the"—who! kings! conquerers! mighty men! the triumphan!! the victorious? the enthroned! the crowned!—no, no: "Blessed are the dead! the dead who die in the Lord!" Wrap me in a Chrisno: "Blessed are the dead! the dead who die in the Lord!" Wrap me in a Christian's blessed shroud, and I would scorn, with the immortal scorn of an archangel, a conqueror's robe, a monarch's regalia.

Blessed be God, there are some bible truths which will prove untrue in eternity, for then, and there, and for ever, there is no time to die! there is no time to die!!

This School will commence at Shirleysburg on the last Wednesday in September. Instruction will be given in the usual academic studies, and in any branches of a collegiate education that may be required. The healthful and retired situation of the willage, its beautiful scenery and the convenience of access by the railroad renders this place one of the most desirable points for the establishment of an Academy in the State.

The neighborhood of the flourishing Female Seminary, under the charge of the Rev. James Campbell, offers an inducement to parents who desire to send their children from home, together. The very auspreious commencement that has been made, the friendly zeal of the citizens for its success, and the wealth and intelligence of the surrounding country, give assurance that the design of rendering this institution permanent will be sustained.
