If his example be favorable, it must be made known. If his influence be valuable, it will be doubly powerful and effective, when exerted in connection with others. A thousand mountain rills, in separate channels, would dry up, which in one, would form the mighty, the majestic the resistless river.

This is the more necessary, because the influence of the friend of temperance, who refuses publicly to give the signature of his name to the temperance pledge, is exerted against his own favorite cause. The cause of temperance, in the eyes of its enemies, is now identical with that of the temperance society. He, therefore, who is not openly and decidedly for us, is against us. All who do not declare for us are clarmed by the encmy of all soberness. And as there is not an individual in this house without influence, dien on influence, which gathering force and vol- solf ume from each revolving year, may be felt sold by generations yet unborn, there is no such ject individual, male or female, out of the bosom follo of the temperance society, who is exerting | ried that influence against the cause of tempe. ed-
