world that their tenets, founded on a perfect part of a very innocent conversation, the system of deism and high notions of liberty and equality of mankind, were professed by the workmen employed in the construction of Solomon's Temple. Those workmen were divided by Adoniram into three classes -apprentices, fellows and masters. He gave to all of them words and signs, which enabled them to recognize those who worked in the construction of the 'Femplé from all others; and he gave to each class words and signs which enabled the members to reognise the workmen of their own class.

The story of that entertaining novel, 'Herman of Unn,' is founded on the persecution of the heroine by one of the secret tribunals of Germany. Without going so far for the origin of these institutions as the time of the erection of Solomon's Temple, we may reasonably conclude that they arose as a matter A LL persons indebted to the Estate of als, in the period of confusion which follow nals, in the period of confusion which follow ed the breaking up of the empire of Charles

Pennsylvania College.

In passing through Gettyshurg a few days igo, I was struck with the external appearance of Pennsylvania College. This noble edifice, it appears, is near its completion, and will be occupied the next session. In entering Gettysburg from the West, you discover one of the most beautiful landscapes the eye can behold. Before you, is the town, finely laid out; and embracing a number of excellent private buildings. On the right is the Seminary of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, a chaste and elegant building of brick, situate on a considerable eminenence,---and commanding a beautiful view of a great part of the town and vicinity. In a direct line with the Seminary, are two large brick buildings, one on each side, intended for the professors, which, with the main building in the centre, make a beautiful appearance, when viewed from the town.

On the left is Pennsylvania College, which at once attracts attention by its imposing exterior. Indeed, it is said to be one of the most splendid buildings in the State. It is situated nearly opposite the Seminary, on a gentle acclivity, not quite so elevated as the Seminary, whilst the latter seems to view with conscious dignity, her less aspiring, but more superb and elegant neighbor.-The College "is a chaste specimen of the Grecian Doric order of architecture, consisting of a centre building and two wings, with end projections, front and rear. Its whole length is 150 feet. The building is your family, you would not now be in your present four stories high, with blocking course 21 feet high, resting upon a heavy cornice around the entire building. On the centre is placed an octagonal cupola 184 feet in diameter, and 24 feet high, with an observatory on its top. The entire front of the centre building (45 feet) is occupied by a portico, consisting of four fluted columns, togit rid of so many all at onco, I am afraid I shall four feet in diameter at their bases, and 22} feet high; resting on abutments brought up to a level with the floor of the second story. On these columns rest an appropriate entablature, together with the roof, cornice divorce in the matter, you can't do that unless you and blocking course, of the front of the centre building. The portico projects 14 feet from the centre building, and is made accessible on the outside by a flight of steps, equal in width to its whole front. The edifice is composed of brick, and the whole exterior is painted white. The building, (besides a hall of 11 feet width from front to rear, on the second floor of the centre buildng, and passages on every floor, the entire length of the building) will contain 75 apartments or rooms, 54 of which are designed for the use of the students-the remainder are, a college Hall, (42 by 22 feet) Library, and Lyceum of the same size, two rooms for the literary societies, each 43 feet by 19, in the fourth story; four recitation roems; refectory, 41 by 211 feet; together with the necessary apartments for the steward and family. The prospects of this institution are of the most flattering description. Its friends have been cheered and encouraged, by the unprecedented success it has met with, since its organization. Though it has been but a few years in operation as a college, it already numbered, during the last session, 120 students : and a large additional number is preparing to enter this fall. There are two vacations in the year, commencing on the third Thursday of April and September, each of six weeks continuance. The annual commencement takes place at the close. of the summer session.
