OTTEMBER, PENN.

FRIDAY MORNING, DEC. 29, 1837.

Dissolution of the Union

After a portion of our time was spent on the following intelligence we received from Washington...

Disunion of the Union

The city is full of excitement, and we are confident in the ebullition of passion and madness of the times...

The subject of the day

Today, Mr. Slade proposed, and we were to-day to debate a motion submitted by him on Monday...

Various attempts were made to get him off the floor, without success. A motion to adjourn was submitted, but was not adopted...

The Disgraceful Result

We have been reading in the Philadelphia National Gazette, a paper that has said on the subject of the Abolition of Slavery...

The Disgraceful Result

Our readers will see the justice to what we here, if ever, trouble them with our views on the vexed question of slavery...

The Disgraceful Result

The Congressional history of the last few days presents subjects in a new aspect. It has, in fact, been such that by one of those strange political convolutions...

The Disgraceful Result

We annex the names and names of our members to the names of the Pennsylvania members of the State voting in the affirmative...

parliamentary authority be silenced, and with the same result...

Noble Sentiment

The sentiments avowed in the following address are noble. We relate them with pleasure, and we trust they will be a source of encouragement...

The Union

Within a few days past the Capital at Washington has presented to our eyes a scene which we will not say alarming, but at least a most unusual one...
