They express opinions to which every will be the effect of this movement remains to be seen. For ourselves, we regard it as the act of a highly respectable portion of the opposition party of this country, legitimately done, and left to have such influence as it may be entitled to, with such as act on principle with those who make it. General Harrison and Mr. Webster are accredited Whigs, nor can they be made less so by the professional with the country was, however, too thin; the distinguished statesman, only it is incomparable talents, oratory, and statesmanship; and not a few of these of October, 1838, viz: Commissioners of the Internal Improvement Fund, State Roads, State Roads, State Roads, Bridges, Railroad, Canal companies, &c... Every Whig press of this city supported General Harrison at the last contest with hearty good will, and a vast majority of the Whigs of the Commonwealth anxiously hoped for his success. Mr. Webster has been the object of the merited and ready praises of the same presses during all the recent political convolusions. We see no reason to change our tone with regard to these eninent individuals because of their being nominated, not unexpectedly, by a portion of our political bettern—brethren at least in opposition to the principles and measures of the Administration. It seems to us that it would be at least decrous to pause in the expression of regret or reprobation used the nonther white gandidate, but we have tots much regard for that candidate to expressed their views. We feel and shall everyers none. Friendly we are and always have been to another Whig candidate, but we have tots much regard for that candidate to express irritation and uneasiness at a measure, which, if improper or premature, can do no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be no harm, and in which, if influential would be not harm and in which, if influential would be not harm and in which, if influential would be not harm and in which, if influential would be not harm and in measure, which, if improper or premature, can do no harm, and in which, if influential
