From Friendship's Offering for 1839. THE OLD GENTLEMAN.

'Alas, do you forget that I am talking of my armbility the father of Miss Montgomery! But when I came to calculate age, I found, that if any at all, he was more likely to be her grandfather. STAR & REPUBLICAN BANNER | 'It is the same thing to my story,' said 1 I, of course, found Miss Montgomery all had dreau ed.'

"Why of course?" Because my imagination so willed it. When Cervantes made Don Quixote mistake a peasant girl for his high born priucess, he did not depart from nature-he merely carried nature to that pitch of exravagance required for his romance. It akes a great deal to disabuse the fancy of a youth of seventeen ; and there was noth-[ing in Marion Montgomery to give a very ] violent shock to any of my preconceived notions Her features were handsome, her complexion more fair than pale, her hair between flaxen and auburn; she sang ballads, played the Battle of Prague, read novels and was passionately fond of poetry. What more could I have desired? Did it require a very potent enchantment to make me take this country girl for my Dulcinea? 'Still, there was a certain awkwardness in our meeting. Marion had been so long the companion of my imagination, that 1 thought she would recognise me. I expected conscious looks, and shakings of the hand; and, when, instead, I saw the grace. ful girl fall back, rather than advance, as she curteised to my introductory bow, and draw up her stately neck, and drop her sweet, soft eyelids, I was confounded, nay over-awed. How terrible is a well bred young woman of seventeen to a great boy Now sorrowing exclaim-'Can these things be?' of that age! My heart sank as I looked at her; my hopes died away; I was amazed at my presumption; and, if a proper excuse could have been found, 1 verily believe should have returned home that instant. In the course of the day, however, 1 became more tranquil. We talked of novels, and poetry, and walks, and woods; and then she sang, and played—and vanished.

> 'The next morning, before joining the family at breakfast, I wrote some verses, which were given to her the same day by her brother.

They were strong enough for a beginning. I thought them too strong. When Ne'er cross thy youthful steps, nor chill the form assured that they were actually in her hands, I was one moment in a burning fever, and the next in a cold sweat. I took good care to keep out of her way that day; Of new-born Spring, play round thy youthful which I managed by persuading her brother to go with me to some distance to fish. When wintry blasts are hus'd, as 'twere in death, He praised the verses warmly; assured me that they would make an impression; and even declared his conviction that Marion had already begun to feel the tender senti-'For my part,' said he, 'I have taken

THE GETTYSBURG STAR.

Is the largest Newspaper in Adams County, published every Tuesday, devoted to News, foreign and domestic, Politics, Literature, the Arts. Science, Agriculture, Amusement, &c., and is calculated either for the Fireside or the Man of Business. It furnishes everything of the least interest, of a Congressional and Legislative character; information respecting the Courts, Markets, &c. and generally embraces matters nteresting to all classes of society. Advertisers would do well to have their Advertisements published in the Star. It has a weekly circulation of about EIGHT HUNDRED COPIES, and is read by the business men of all parties.
