cisely analogous, to the one for which we ! ow contend? For example, if I publish a written slander concerning any person, no matter, whether its contents be true or false, I am liable to be indicted, and criminally punished. Why is this? The reason is obvious; simply, because the publication of such a writing, is calculated to produce a breach of the peace; and to disturb the quiet of Society. And who would hazard the opinion, that licensing taverns and grogshops, does not tend to produce more breach of the peace, than does the publication of libels?

The gambler too, is not permitted openly to carry on his unhallowed calling, in defi ance of public opinion. Something more than public opinion, something more than moral suasion, was resorted to, in order to protect society from his nefarious pilferings. And althouse gramphing has not been entire And although gambling has not been entire ly suppressed, even when the combined forces of law and public opinion have been arrayed against it; yet certain it is, that its operations are much more limited, than they would be, did the law license it or even pass it by unnoticed. And wherein is gambling me during the past week and dischargworse than intemperance? Are they not ed their accounts, I roturn my sincere worse than intemperance: Are mey not kindred vices?
