From the Southern Literary Mcssenger. ODE TO LOVE.

BY WM. WALLACE.

CHILD OF EDEN!-born in light, Where Creation's wandering fires Jewelled first the brow of night, And the angels swept their lyres!-Seraphe then by thee impelled, Bent before the august throne, And in ecstacy beheld Thy bright effulgence alone-Glowing-burning-flashing down, From Jehovah's awful crown!

CHILD OF PARADISE!-thy wings Glorious as the morning spread, When by Eden's glassy springs, Earth's first pair of mortals wed;-Lions terrible in strength Courted man's approving look,-He before the serpent's length Not as now in terror shook, And the harps of angels played Notes unearthly in the shade.

COMFORTER OF EARTH!-we kneel, Drunk with pleasure, at thy shrine, And in boyhood's rapture feel Presence nought so sweet as thine. In the mother's eye of blue-In the virgin's blushing cheek, Where the bright soul sparkling through, Utters more than words can speak, In the first long kiss we see Mirrored thy divinity.

Roll the battle's stormy drum! Wave the banner!-peal the fife! Hark! the fearful cry, "they come, Sword to sword and life for life!" See the patriot moved by thee, Bleeding falls upon the sod; Still he shouts "your watchword be FREEDOM! NATIVE LAND and Gon!" Hark the cannon's dying roll Victory utters to his soul!

MURDER scowls his haggard brow! Black REVENGE sits waiting by !-Now the knife is lifted-now Passion rolls her blood-shot eye !--Softly-sweet thy words implore, And thy smiles the brow have weath'd; Passion's burning rage is o'er-MURDER's glittering kinfe is sheath'd-For as brothers—friends embrace In thy rosy dwelling place.

Leaps the storm-king from his cloud-Bursts the whirlwind from his lair-And the giant wood is bowed In the tempest-troubled air !--Save him Heaven! the sheltering oak Quivers-crashes on the ground;-Scathless of the thunder-stroke;-Tremblingly he looks around:-Thine, oh! Love, the sheltering power, In creation's darkest hour !

Gods from rugged marble start-Blossoms gem the withered tree-Glory is where'er thou art-Ruin, when bereft of thee ! Ceased the ancient hymn of spheres-Suns become at noon day dim-Mourning angles stood in tearsthe throne of HIM When thou for us glorified. In the mortals, suffered-died.

MERCY'S SYMBOL!—at thy word (Where the Tempest reared his form, But his voice no longer heard.) Rainbows wreathed the dving storm! Thunders in their darkest ire-Lightnings in their wildest flash-Ætnas quench their deadliest fire-Stormy oceans cease to dash-When the sunny brow appears Sparkling from the clouded spheres!

Essence BRIGHT!-thy fingers sweep Nature's harp-strings, and her song From the torrent-rill and deep, Peals eternally along. Where no eyes has seen but Hrs Through the boundless sea of space, Worlds by thee impelled in bliss, Roll with majesty and grace: Yes! where cherubs fear to tread, Thou the dance of stars has lead!

GLORIOUS CHAIR! whose links unite Earth to God's eternal scat-Where the golden orbs of night Are but clay beneath its feet-Man-archangles-worlds adore thee-And the everlasting hours; Earth's assembled thousands bending Round thine altar breathe the prayer-Hail the day when scraphs blending In the crimson clouds of air, Ope thy temple-yet untrod, And unveil its monarch-Gon!

IT LOOKS SO GENTEEL .- The editor of he Maine Cultivator is a man of good notions. He says that some people have had an idea that early rising is better than late rising; but that is a false notion altogether. Early rising puts color into the cheek to be ture, and elasticity into the step. But what of that? It makes you strong, beautiful, and rosy cheeked, and gives you many long years to live. But for all that, eary rising is decidedly vulgar-merely mechanical-and only suited to the common people, who have to earn their meals beore they eat them. We like to see people lie in bed especially the women. We admire a woman who sleeps till ten and pulse, it looks so genteel!
