A FRAGMENT.

Child of the erring heart's desire, To man in blissful Eden given! When yon bright orbs of mystic fire First hymned the circling hours of Heaven, Oh! had'st thou mocked the tempter's power, The skies had been beneath thy bower: And man's immortal sure, Of thee and Paradise possessed, Had been beyond the angels blessed!

But this was not ordained to be, Child of the soft and suffering mien! And keenly has the stern decree Been felt through ages lapsed between. High gifted mon thy trespass shared, And death with his bleak world preferred To Eden's bowers unblest by theo, Then wav'd the sword o'er Eden's gate, And Paradise was desolute!

Frail, erring child of birth divine; Weak, wandering, yet belov'd of Heaven; Repentant, low, at morcy's shrine Thou heard'st and art forgiven. O, who, with hardened mind shall trace To thee the ruin of his race,

As regards the utility of the tongue, it is needless to say that it is one of the most important appen dages of the human system. It is designed succeeds, yet still it casts a gloomy shade 'tother side." for other uses than licking molasses and for a time over life's happy hours, and during the pleasant, but sometimes tedious complish but little. process of mustification. Its principle office is to form or finish words as they bubble up in a chaotic state, through the thorax, from the well-spring of the heart. In society the tongue is both a useful and pleasing member-as it not only imparts information to the unlearned, but serves in beguiling many a weary hour, and aids in digesting sorrows, that sit as heavy upon the soul as stewed horse nuils upon a dys. peptic's stomach. In its operation it should be guided by prudence and moderation, else it becomes a bore instead of a blessing. Some People have naturally so much loguacious steam in their boilers, that when they once get the clappers to their corn. mills in operation, they never know when to stop them.
