

Gettysburg High School

The Grand Jurors of Adams County, (January, 1932) most respectfully tender their thanks to Mr. WILLIAM CLARK, the Principal of the Public High School...

By order of the Grand Jury, DAVID MCCREARY, Foreman.

Remarks of Mr. Stevens

In the House of Representatives on Tuesday last, on the final passage of the Resumption Bill...

Mr. STEVENS stated that he would explain the considerations which induced him to vote for the bill...

From the Richmond Compiler. A SHOCKING MURDER.—One of the most brutal murders on record was committed in our city on Friday night...

From the Richmond Compiler. MILD WINTER.—The Lancaster Intelligence has the coincidence that the coldest winter has happened at a regular period...

A FACT NOT GENERALLY KNOWN. The Washington correspondent of the New York Courier & Enquirer of Saturday last, has the following interesting statement of facts...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

owing to the readiness of the watch, on information of the occurrence was communicated to the Mayor until he came down in the morning to attend to the duties of his office...

Death is said to be a most desperate and vindictive man, and had been heard and was present at the life of his partner and the woman...

This horrid tragedy cannot, in the minds of reflecting people, attain the fame of our heroes. The character of the parties is such as should be sufficient to prevent any such consequence...

On the eighteenth day of August last, immediately after the first vote, Capt. John Tyler, with all the passionate earnestness of a child entreating for mercy from a father...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

HORRIBLE BARBARITY.—Hot lead poured into the ear of a Wife and Mother.—The Belfast (Me.) Signal states that the wife of Joseph Leach was murdered by her husband...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

A PAINFUL AFFAIR.—An Eloquent Young Miss in her 14th year, from the West, perhaps the richest heiress in the world...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.—FRANK DROWNING.—Yesterday morning about four o'clock, the mail stage left this place for Pittsburg...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

LIBERAL CRETIONS.—The N. Y. Express says:—Settlements to a very great extent are daily made by persons who have long been embarrassed. Several cases had that swollen with heavy rains...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

WORK TO BE DONE.—By the U. S. statistics for 1930 there are 65,000,000 gallons of oil in the United States...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

Case of Mr. Adams—Right of Petition, &c. The proceedings in the House of Representatives of the United States...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

REMOVAL. H. VORNSDEL, Tailor. Respectfully informs the citizens of Gettysburg and the public generally...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

REMOVAL. H. VORNSDEL, Tailor. Respectfully informs the citizens of Gettysburg and the public generally...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

REMOVAL. H. VORNSDEL, Tailor. Respectfully informs the citizens of Gettysburg and the public generally...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.

REMOVAL. H. VORNSDEL, Tailor. Respectfully informs the citizens of Gettysburg and the public generally...

It would grant that such infraction operated for the benefit of the banks—but they need not relax such benefits when offered...

There was another almost overwhelming objection to the passage of the bill. If these notes are not redeemed, they will become worthless...

He wrote a letter to Judge McLean, requesting him to come to Washington and to State, offering him a carte blanche to form the Cabinet as should suit himself...

On the first page Judge McLean found the President's letter and was greatly satisfied. He had found Captain Tyler prepared (notwithstanding he had offered carte blanche) to nominate at least three...

It was evident that the glitter of gold and the glimmer of silver had blinded the eyes and carried away the hearts of the people...

It would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

He would not stop to argue how fallacious it was to suppose that a great and highly organized nation could carry on business with a currency of paper money...

These were his reasons for voting for the bill. He hoped his doing so would not drive others off from its support. He wanted the lay to see that the Executive and Senate, and let the people give it a fair trial.