Mr. Cooper.

The return of our distinguished fellow-citizers to the Legislature has been hailed with pleasurein all parts of the State, and has drawn forth from the Whig press a number of handsome compliments to his ability and popularity. As a specimen we extract the following from the able Philadelphia correspondent of the National Intilligen cer, who, after some well considered suggestions in regard to Pennsylvania politics, remarks:

It is a matter of much gratulation that some of the ablest and most considerate of the public men of the Whig party have been elected. Among them the most deservedly popular is JAMES COOPER of Adams, formerly in Congress. With large experience and ability to guide and influence legislative bodies, Mr. Cooper unites singular personal popularity with all partics, attested by his running ahead of his ticket. To him more than any other one man is Pennsylvania indebted for the restoration of her public credit. He fought for public faith when the cause was doubtful and perilous, and still higher honors await him, if, at the head of the Whigs in the Pennsylvania Legislature, he leads a triumphant party safely and patriotically brough the perils which always surround the victors.
