> For the Potter Journal. THE PINE ORACLE.

Low on the Pine Tree's moss-grown feet, I sat, one pleasant summer day: I leaned against his breast, and cried, "My joy hath passed away!

"I've left the dreary cot below, To sit and muse at thy brown feet; To hear thy loving voice, and learn If Life, indeed, is sweet, "The hills stand bathed in morning light

Below, in peace, the valley sleeps, While, brooding over tranquilly, Its watch a shadow keeps.

"I am alone; the blue sky bends, In sileuce, over leaf and tree; The flowers smile upward to its face, But that is nought to me-

"I am alone; the green meads watch The light clouds floating by; The wild wind sings amid the trees, But where, in life, am 1?"

"Ah, child !"-the Oracle replied-Who walkest blindly on thy way, Praying that o'er thy path may fall

One blessed gleam of day, " And see'st not that the sky above Is lit with gloryaevermore; And where thy weary feet move slow, God's angels tread before : "Thou dreamest of the pillar'd fire, And yet forgetest that, as well, Across the desert's burning sand The cooling shadow fell.

"As to the wither'd autumn leaves The blossoms of the summer cling, With blessings from thy faded past Shall the rich harvest spring."

The brooding bush of earth and sky The presence of the spirit told, And west the sunset shone as glowed.

The burning bush of old.

Baptized with silence, still and white, The blossoms of the forest shone; The Hymn of Nature answered me-I stood no more alone.
