SENECA COMMON SCHOOL AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL OF REFORM.

AN ADDRESS will be given at the Court House this (Wednesday) evening in behalf of the State Society engaged in the enterprise.

Some of the young folks of our village are making preparations to have a grand Independence Ball on Friday evening July 2nd, at the Court House. This will afford an excellent opportunity to those who are fond of "tripping the light fantastic toe," to exhibit their proficiency in the art.

The Sons of Temperance of this place are going to celebrate our 82d National birthday in good style. They have engaged a Brass Band for the occasion; and, a first-class speaker—Wm. Nicholson, Esq., of Philadelphia. The Sabbath School celebration and picnic comes off in the forenoon, and the children are to be addressed by a Speaker from abroad. The Committee of Arrangements of the S. of T., have fixed upon 2 o'clock, P. M., as the hour to listen to the Address of Mr. Nicholson. The general arrangements of the Committee not being completed, we are not able to publish the programme of the day, as we desire. A handbill containing the programme will be posted in due time. We were near forgetting to mention that Saturday, the 3d, is the day on which the Fourth of July is to be celebrated in this place.

Youth is a glorious invention. While the girls chase the hours, and you chase the girls, the months seem to dance away "with down upon their feet." What a pity Summer is short—before you know it lovers become deacons, and romps are grandmothers. And just so it is in the mechanical arts—change following change. Ten years since our sewing-machines were living, moving, animate things, (begging Gould Brown's pardon,) done up in calico and rags, and having necessity for a motive power—now, the thing is different, the machines being living, moving, inanimate things, done up in iron and wood with mahogany finish, and having a delicately molded and gaitered pedal motive power. The choicest machines being those manufactured by the Grover & Baker Co., of New York. See card.

How to Tell the Weather.—Some one writes to a late Agricultural paper as follows, in regard to weather-seeing—the only difficulty with our comprehension of it being this: Suppose there were no clouds at all in sight, what would be the result of an observation after this writer's fashion? But here it is, for what it is worth: "When you wish to know what the weather is to be, go out and select the smallest cloud you see; keep your eye upon it, and if it decreases and disappears, it shows a state of the air which will be sure to be followed by fine weather; but if it increases in size, take your great coat with you, if you are going from home, for falling weather will be not far off. The reason is this:—When the air is becoming charged with electricity, you will see every cloud attracting all lesser ones towards it, until it gathers into a shower; and, on the contrary, when the fluid is passing off or diffusing itself, then a large cloud will be seen breaking to pieces and dissolving."

On Wednesday evening of last week, we attended a meeting of the Literary Association of the Coudersport Academy, which is composed of the students of both sexes, and at which Essays and Addresses are read by the members. We were much gratified by the exercises of the evening, and listened with much pleasure to Essays by Miss Moore and Miss Ensign, and to the following Address of Mr. S. S. Greenman, of Hebron township, which we solicited for publication in order that the people of the county may have an opportunity to judge of the Academy by its works. We defer until next week, any further remarks, for want of room; asking that our readers will give the address of Mr. Greenman a careful perusal:

Friends and Fellow-Students.—In the few words which I shall say to you this evening, I do not expect to convince you of the falsity of this saying, "There is no new thing under the Sun;" for, whatever of originality there may yet be in the world of ideas, is so deeply hidden in the labyrinth of thought, that I may not hope to trace it out. Hence, you will not be disappointed in listening to a few dull and prosy ideas upon an old and dry subject, viz:—

TRUTH EXEMPLIFIED.

In bringing this Earth and its inhabitants into being, the Creator saw fit to establish certain conditions and principles, and between them to institute certain relations; so that given results should follow. These conditions, principles, relations; and results, are called Truths. According to Webster, "Truth is real facts or just principles; the real state of things." This is the abstract quality; and it is one of the grandest subjects of thought—extended as the Universe, yet capable of being studied in the minutest particles of created matter. Present in the workings of the mightiest intellects, and equally present in the feeblest efforts of the mind of the outtaught infant, pervades the whole, unchanging and undying as the Source from which it emanated. But, as Theory, however grand and sublime it may be, is ever wholly useless until it is brought down from the giddy heights of Ideality, where it had its birth, and domesticated amidst the dust and toil of this lower world and made to lend its aid to those who stand in need of it,—so Theory, which includes all correct theories, is devoid of all practical importance until it is exemplified, and rendered a living force, in and by the lives of men. But I see that my subject is too indefinite, and I will amend it so that it shall read—MORAL TRUTH EXEMPLIFIED.

By moral truth, I mean the facts and relations of Morality and Virtue; in other words, those relations which Man sustains to man, his Creator; and our lives brought into conformity with those relations will be their exemplification. As truth, in its largest sense, is practically worthless so long as it exists only as a theory, so moral truth existing only in idea is not only worthless but practically dead. But though dead, it speaks to our conscience, and with silent accusations, reproves us for not giving it life and vitality. In Science and Art, the practical measure of every discovery and invention is the results produced by it, and the benefits flowing from those results; and with equal justice we can apply to moral truths the same measure,—hence, they must be judged of according as they make mankind better. But, as Truth of itself has no living force, and receives animation only through ourselves, it follows that instead of applying this measure to truths in the abstract only, we must also apply it to that truth exemplified by our lives, and, consequently, to ourselves as individuals. A person may have the clearest views of ideal truth—be eloquent in advocating it, and work himself into ecstasies over its grandeur and beauty—yet, if that truth does not speak to his conscience in such a way as to affect the conduct of his life, the moral measure of what he is below what God will require of him.

It is not a pleasant thing to point out the failings of humanity, yet it is impossible to shut our eyes to the fact that many, very many, belong to that class of whom it has been written, "They see the right, and yet the wrong pursue."

Of such characters history is full—men whose clear perceptions could and did see the evil of their lives, but whom the love of that evil prevented from forsaking it. I will call your attention to one instance, of this kind in connection with men of our own country, and beg your indulgence while I am personal.

Remember three of the greatest characters in our history, namely, WASHINGTON, HENRY, and JEFFERSON. The first said, "I long for the time to come when slavery shall be abolished by law;" the words of the second I cannot forget, but the sentiment was that he was convinced of the injurious and evil of that institution; while JEFFERSON records his convictions in such words as these: "I tremble for my country when I remember that God is just." And yet, these three great men lived and died slave-holders, thus giving to the world the powerful effect of their example in favor of that great sin; for the Right is never worked for the Wrong their living deeds. But they are not those of olden times, or the great of our own country only, who are found in this class. Far from it! Truth has its delinquents in every age, and in every station of life.

But all are not equally deficient who fall below the mark. Take those who live and act according to the best of their knowledge as the rule of our standard, and we shall see some whose truths exemplified will be expressed by one-fourth, some by one-half, and some by three-fourths; yet, who among us can say, "My measure is full." One way in which people often fail to exemplify what they feel convinced is true, is by passively approving of wrong performed or advanced in their presence, thus countenancing the evil, and at the same time ignoring their own individuality. An evil deed should always be reproved, and wrong principles should seldom be countenanced by our silence when that advocacy is intended for our particular benefit. The man who feels the dignity of the existence God has given him, will be not merely passively good, but a living, moral force. But we can live to the best of our knowledge, yet, in so doing, we may exemplify falsehood instead of truth. Yet it is far better to err on the side of Reason than Conscience. When the former leads astray, the consequences may, indeed, be fearful; yet, the wrong done being unintentional, leaves the moral perceptions as clear, and the moral feelings as sensitive as ever. But when the latter is satisfied, our moral nature is benumbed and deadened. Renew this offering to sin but a few times, and that warning voice is hushed, and that mysterious light, that was wont to guide us through dark places, goes out forever. We must purchase truth dearly, but, having once found it, we must hold it to as the sailor does to the spar that keeps him from drowning. Heed the feeblest, the smallest whisperings of Conscience; "Its slightest touches, instant pause, Denial all side pretences, And resolutely keep its law, Uncaring consequences."

Follow its guidance in the exemplification of Truth, and be happy.

RULES AND REGULATIONS:

- I. All Animals, to be entitled to compete for Premiums, shall have been kept and owned in the County, by the persons presenting them, at least four months previous to the Annual Fair, and all animals, except breeding Oxen, shall have been bred and raised in the County; but when Working Oxen or Matched Horses or Mares are entered for Premiums, they shall be eligible if one was raised in the county.
- II. No person or persons shall be permitted to compete for a Premium on any article of Domestic Manufacture, or Butter or Cheese, unless the same shall have been made or manufactured by such person or persons, or his or their family or families, within the year that it shall be offered for a premium.
- III. Exhibitors must become members of the Society and have their articles and animals entered on the Secretary's book on or before the day next preceding the opening of the Exhibition; and all articles and animals must be brought within the enclosure as early as noon of the first day of exhibition, in order that they may be suitably arranged. The Managers do not intend to ASSURE any exhibitor who neglects these requirements, that his articles can be submitted to the Judges. While every effort will be made to secure the examination and proper notice of every article on exhibition, justice to those who comply with the rules of the Society requires that they shall in all cases first receive attention.
- IV. Articles or animals removed before the close of the Exhibition (except by permission of the President) can not receive a Premium, though awarded.
- V. Should any individual enter an animal in any other name than that of the bona fide owner, the person making such entry shall not be allowed a premium should one be reported by the Society, and shall be precluded from competing at any future exhibition of the Society.
- VI. Persons entering stock of the age of three years and under, shall furnish the Judges evidence of the time when the animals were dropped, to be filed by them with the Secretary; and the ages of animals above this, to be given on making their entries.
- VII. The Judges shall in all cases withhold premiums where the animal or article is not worthy, though there be no competition.
- VIII. No premiums are to be awarded to Bulls, Cows, or Heifers that have been fitted for the butcher—the intention of the Society being to promote the rearing of superior animals for breeding purposes.
- IX. Whenever it shall appear to the Judges that articles of superior merit have been presented, not noticed in the Premium List, they shall make special report thereof to the Board of Managers.
- X. It is particularly desired that no persons shall be present while the Judges are examining the Stock referred to them, except those taking charge of the animals, unless by special request.
