Charles Mackay in a Slave-Pen. The following is from a recent letter of Charles Mackey to The London Illustrat-

On my first arrival at New Orleans, I lingered for a few moments at the open door of a stage depot, without daring to go in, lest I should be suspected of espiennge, or mere curiosity, and expelled. But seeing among the company an emineut merchant of New York, whose friend. ship I had been fortunate enough to make, and whom I knew to be no slave-dealer or supporter of Slavery, I walked in and joined his party, drawn thither, like myseif, by currosity. On one side of the room the male slaves, with clean linen and shining new hats and boors, were arranged, and on the other the females were disposed in their best attire, most of tham exceedingly neat, but some beate. I was immediately beset with entreaties to purchase.

Progress of Public Opinion in

Seventy Years. At the first session of the legislature of Maryland, to which William Pinckney was elected, he made a speech upon the report of a committee appointed to consider the laws of that state prohibiting the voluntary emancipation of slaves, in the course of which he used the following extraordinary language; at least we should think such language extraordinary if it ferritories of the United States for their go were to fall from the lips of a Maryland
