The Great Struggle with Slavery Bravely Stated

Abram Lincoln raised the fury of Douglas by asserting in the Illinois campaign, that freedom and slavery were so antago nistical, that the contest between them would go until, the States of this Union should be all free or all sleve. This is a truism, that every person who knews the difference between right and wrong knows perfectly. And yet, when Win. H. Seward in his Rochester speech, states the same truth, in rather more emphatic terms; even timid Republicans were alarmed at the hue and cry raised by the allies of slavery at this simple statement of the antagonism between vice and virtue. We rejuice that at last there is a statesman in our own commonwealth who has the boldness to proclaim this truth in profession.
